PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 12, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW Subscription, 5s. per Annum, delivered post-free.—Single Number, 6d.; by post, 7d.

REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

The Christmas Bookseller.

HE BOOKSELLER (issued in December) will contain a series of Illustrated Notices, describing the Chief Books of the Season adapted for Presents. It will also contain some other literary features of interest, besides numerous Illustrated Advertisements, printed on fine toned paper. The Number will thus, in various ways, be rendered attractive to Bookbuyers, as a guide to the purchase of BOOKS FOR PRESENTS, not only at Christmas, but throughout the year; as, in addition to the ordinary circulation, the CHRISTMAS BOOKSELLER finds its way into the drawing-rooms of thousands of wealthy Bookbuyers in all parts of the world—and it may be safely affirmed that no Illustrated Volume is more carefully examined.

No expense whatever is spared in the production of the CHRISTMAS BOOKSELLER, in proof of which it may be mentioned that every copy of the issue for 1870 cost the Proprietor more than two shillings; and, notwithstanding the large impression, it was out of print immediately.

To meet the views of the Retail Trade who may wish to circulate copies in their own localities, as "The Christmas Bookseller," an additional number will be printed without any special reference to Trade matters, and will be supplied to Retail Booksellers, with their own Names and Addresses printed thereon.* The price to the public will be 1s.; or, if sent by post, 1s. 6d.

THE BOOKSELLER is Published Monthly, and may be obtained through all Booksellers and Newsvendors, or is supplied direct from the Office, free of postage, for Five Shillings a-year, payable in advance, to Subscribers resident in Great Britain, France, United States, British North America, Australia, and most of the Colonies. To Subscribers in India, Germany, and some other countries, the charge is Six Shillings, on account of the extra postage.

Advertisements are inserted in THE BOOKSELLER on the following terms: Four lines, set close in column, 3s. 6d.; per line beyond, 6d. Six lines, set close across the page, 10s. 6d.: per line beyond, 1s. 6d. Page, £3 3s. Half-Page, 36s. Quarter-Page, 20s. One-Sixth, 14s. Displayed Advertisements, in column or across the page, are charged according to the space occupied.

In consequence of the time required for "getting up" the Illustrations, Advertisers will much oblige the Publisher by sending their copy early.

Orders for Copies must be received by the Fourteenth of November, and be accompanied by Cheque or Post-office Order for the amount, together with full directions as to the conveyance, &c.

Price-Fifty Copies, with Name and Address, 30s.; Twenty-five, 17s. 6d.

^{*} In consequence of the large demand for the CHRISTMAS BOOKSELLER, and the difficulty which is found in supplying the demand at a time of the year when Printers and Binders are overwhelmed with work, the Publisher has determined not to supply any Subscriber with more than Fifty Copies with his Name and Address printed thereon.

TRADE AND LITERARY GOSSIP.

A single glance at the enormous stock of Messrs. Sotheran and Co., in the Strand, will prepare any one for the announcement that other outlets than those of London would be desirable for its dispersal; accordingly Mr. Sotheran has entered into partnership with Mr. Baer and some other gentlemen, and now dates from Paris and Frankfort, as well as from the three establishments in London. The business in London will be carried on under the name of Henry Sotheran, Joseph Baer, and Co. In the Tower Street branch, Mr. Edward Jones, who has for some years had the management, has been admitted partner. Allthe world now travelling westward, Messrs. Sotheran and Baer have determined to move also, and are building a magnificent store in Piccadilly, opposite Burlington House.

Mr. Richard T. Griffin, eldest son of the late Mr. Charles Griffin, of Stationers' Hall Court and Glasgow, has now assumed the entire management of the business which, under his father, became one of great magnitude. An advertisement in this month's BOOKSELLER indicates the direction in which fresh efforts will be made to sustain the old reputation of the house.

The well-known educational establishment of Varty and Cox, formerly Roake and Varty, Adelaide Street, Strand, has been purchased by Mr. Stanford. The premises being required for a neighbouring bank, Mr. Cox determined to retire altogether from the trade.

Mr. Goulden informs us that he has recently sold Mr. Prentice's Bookselling, Stationery, and Printing business at Sandwich to Mr. B. Griffin, late of Edmonton. The Bookselling, Stationery, and Bookbinding departments of Mr. Goulden's old-established Business at Canterbury, to his bro-ther, Mr. H. J. Goulden, and the Newspaper Publishing and Printing departments at Sittingbourne and Canterbury, with the copyright of the "Kentish Chronicle," to Mr. Frederic Mudford, of Canterbury. Also, Mr. Jenner's old-established Bookselling, Stationery, and Printing business at Tewkesbury, to Mr. William North, late of Brix-

Mr. Holmes informs us that he has recently sold Mr. Newby's business, near Tulse Hill, to Mr. Hamburger, Bookseller and Stationer, formerly in business in Murray Street, Camden Square. Also Mr. Ivey's business, 30, Duke Street, Brighton, to Mr. Allen of the same town. And Mr. Logan's business at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, to Mr. A. Carsden, late of Hammersmith; also Mr. Ure's business, Saville Row, Bath, to Mr. D. M. Walters. late of Armagh.

CHESTER. -The firm of Thomas and Blayney has been dissolved, Mr. Thomas retiring; valuation was made by Mr. Lovejoy, of Re and Mr. Holmes, of London.

Mr. Walter Brown has opened an establi in Great Portland Street, in addition to his at Stoke Newington and Islington.

Messrs. Milner and Sowerby have removed their London establishment to No. 16, Paternoster Row, the premises formerly occupied by the late Mr. Alderman Kelly.

The office of the British Workwoman has been removed from the Strand to No. 30, Paternoster Row. The British Workwoman is one of those noiseless scavengers which, entering into count-less dirty holes, alleys, and other receptacles for pollution, clears off a little here and a little there, puts out one man's pipe, makes another sober, helps to send a child to school here, and makes a mother tidy there-supplying entertaining matter all the while.

Mr. Crafter, who for some years has had the management of the business of Messrs. Griffin and Co., has joined the establishment of Messrs. Lockwood and Co., Stationers' Hall Court, as manager.

CHICAGO. - All English booksellers will sympathize with their brethren in this unfortunate For the second time the stores of Mr. Griggs, and of several other well known and highly respected booksellers, have been destroyed. We some time ago gave an account of the new buildings erected by Mr. Griggs, one of the specialities of which was that they were entirely "fireproof." Those of our readers who are not acquainted with America will find an admirable account of Chicago as it was a few months ago in the Leisure Hour, in a series of papers by the editor, Dr. Macaulay, who is about republishing them in a collected form, under the title of "Across the Ferry."

GUILDFORD.—The Chilworth Paper-mill has been disposed of to Messrs. Unwin Brothers, and is being converted into a printing office. One of the novelties is that the motive power will be water-the only instance we are acquainted with of presses being so worked.

Hull.—Mr. Henry Bolton, formerly with Messrs. Longman, and eight years with Mr. J. W. Leng, has commenced business at 19, Saville Street, as a bookseller, and fancy, commercial, and general stationer.

LEAMINGTON. -- Mr. John Arthur. has taken into partnership Mr. Wm. Cunnew, for many years with Messrs. Wertheim and Macintosh, Paternoster Row.

ROTHESAY .-- Messrs. Biggar and Son, now that THE BOOKSELLER declines to advocate protection, have determined to give up that periodical, and to discontinue the bookselling part of their business.

WAKEFIELD. - Messrs. Nicholson and Son, of Halifax, are erecting extensive premises, and will shortly remove the whole of their plant and stock from their old neighbourhood.

TELEGRAPHY .- Mr. Richard Herring having submitted to the Secretary of the Post Office his scheme of "Telegraphic Language for the World, which in an unmistakable manner records itself in twenty-four distinct marks as easily understood as the letters of the Roman alphabet, has at length had the offer of a fair trial for his system.

THE NINE HOURS' MOVEMENT. -This movement has been felt in the printing trade. A circular from the proprietors of the Bath Argus informs us that, unasked, they have reduced the working hours of their men from 60 to 54 weekly. The "stab" hands, who are paid by the day, naturally rejoice at this, but we question whether decent, honest piece workers, with families to keep, and respectable homes to maintain, will consider it a boon. We editors not unfrequently work 18 out of the 24 hours; but then we are not enlightened operatives.

THE BIG GOOSEBERRY .- The parliamentary recess is usually the season when big gooseberries and overgrown turnips make their appearance. Last year both were missing, the Franco-Prussian war supplying the newspapers with as much material as their columns could contain. The year before, if we remember aright, the shorn traveller and fleecing innkeeper filled a void; this season there has not been a single good murder, or even a sensational trial; for the poor lunatic at Stockwell, and the Hampstead Small Pox inquiry have both been failures. But a lucky hit was made by some one calling American publishers "pirates -a most improper and unjust name to apply to men who are quite as honourable as their English brethren. The ball once set rolling has had a kick from all sides. Musty authors whose wares required fresh airing, agents to foreign re-printers and their apologists, and publishers, English and foreign, have come forward, some knowing little, and others knowing less about it; not one of all the writers showing anything like a full grasp of the subject. THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT.—Recent discussions have shown, what all who have thought about it must have long felt, how unsatisfactory is our present law of copyright, domestic, colonial, and international. In our domestic law, questions are continually cropping up, and angry discussions arising between authors and publishers; authors appearing to think that publishers are cheats, the only difference between them being that some cheat less than others-publishers not unfrequently mistaking the property of others for their own, and either wittingly or unwittingly inviting lawyers' letters and threats of action. The cololawyers' letters and threats of action. nial part of the question has not yet come forward with prominence, but it shortly will do so, and unless the question be settled in good time, in a manner fair to both mother-country and colony, the colonists will settle it for themselves. The anomalous state of the international part requires immediate revision, not by crazy philanthropists, or interested booksellers, or 'cute lawyers, but equitably—all rights to be reserved, including those of the people, rights which are very liable to be lest sight of by authors and publishers; and the rights of reprinters, for they, too, have some rights. All these are grave questions requiring very great and calm consideration, not angry newspaper correspondence. We do not despair of a solution, if those who are most interested will set about it in a right spirit; wedonot even despair of the American people agreeing to a fair and equitable International Copyright Act.

But if we were Americans, we would not agree to become parties to any Act at present in existence; and if our authors or large publishers think they will be fools enough to do so, we "guess" they'll be disappointed. LITERARY COPYRIGHT.—It is not our intention at present to go any further into this question, but we recommend to the notice of all our readers a little volume just published by Mr. Hotten, of Piccadilly. Without endorsing all Mr. Hotten's views, we may say that it contains a large amount of information upon some of those points which most need reconsideration and improvement, and will be of considerable service in settling some opinions which, judging from recent correspondence, are very crude.

MR. DISRAELI. -Mr. John Timbs has, in the Leisure Hour, been telling us some more "things not generally known"—amongst others, some of These the early adventures of Mr. Disraeli. These "things" never having happened, were quite "unknown" to the statesman; and his solicitors have written to the editor of the Leisure Hour to say so.

The binders and printers of London are enjoying an almost unexampled prosperity; scarcely a man is out of employment in either of the trades, and everyone who now wishes may put by something for the rainy days that are sure to follow. We are told by a very intelligent employer that sermons to workmen are useless; perhaps so, if they be preached; but masters have many ways of delivering unspoken sermons which workmen can always understand. To the binders especially both men and women have had a very serious lesson—such sermons would not be thrown away.

THE METRIC SYSTEM. In order to familiarise young persons with the metric system of weights and measures, Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston have issued a wall-sheet with coloured diagrams showing the relative sizes of the various weights and measures. A neat little hand-book accompanies the sheet.

BIBLIOGRAPHY .- "A Handy Books, for Book-lovers, Book-buyers and Book-sellers, attempted by John Power," is the title of a volume recently published by Mr. John Wilson, of Book about Bloomsbury. It contains a great deal of informa-tion upon Bibliography, Book Chronology, Useful Receipts, a Typographical Gazetteer, Booksellers' Dictionary, Dictionary of Terms, and a variety of other matter, with eight interesting illustrations. Necessarily, to get all this into a volume of two hundred pages, all the details must be very much compressed, but what is now given will serve for the nucleus of a much larger work, and if any young bookseller will procure a copy in sheets, interleave it, and annotate it, he will stand a fair chance of becoming in course of time not only a good bibliographer but also a good and wealthy bookseller.

CHRISTMAS STATIONERY. When accounts come to be squared, and people receive rewards proportioned to the amount of happiness they have conferred upon their fellow creatures, stationers will come in for a large share of praise, and we may hope more solid reward also. There can be no question respecting their merit, for no profession going confers so much innocent pleasure as that of the stationer. Unlike the purveyor of sweets, he is followed by no nasty doctor; his pleasures are without alloy. Reflections such as these must pervade the minds of happy stationers as they survey their well-filled windows and glass cases, and whether the world be of the same opinion can be of little moment to the man who knows that he has done his duty. Amongst the pleasantest of all pleasant things to look upon, are those articles which the looms of Coventry, guided by the skilful hands of Mr. Stevens, supply. First, in the form of Bookmarkers, with all kinds of good wishes for Christmas, with Happy New Years and many of them, a fresh marker for each; then we have Whist-Markers to shorten long evenings, to say nothing of silk jewellery of all kinds to delight the little folk on Christmas morning; with Scent Sachets, opening out like an oriental tryptich, revealing summer flowers and winter landscapes.

From Mr. Bollans, of Leamington, we have a tastefully worked book-mark; some very pretty complimentary cards for Christmas and the New Year; a splendid Nosegay, with ingenious me-chanical contrivance for raising flowers at any season of the year; Scent Sachets, and other remembrances, any one of which will serve to rivet affections faster than any philter recorded in necromantic art.

LETTS'S METALLIC DIARIES. - These, we believe, are new this year; they are of two sizes, for the pocket, ruled with very faint lines, and form very natty and handsome little companions. One week is given to each opening.

BASKERVILLE NOTE PAPER. - Under this name, Messrs. Goodall have introduced an excellent vellum wove note paper, made of good material, and apparently containing some chemical property which sympathizes with the ink, while the surface, being hard and not slippery, permits the pen, without any effort, to leave its mark. Being put up into neat boxes, suitable alike for the study, the office, or the drawing-room, is an additional recommendation.

Mr. John B. Day has turned the halfpenny postal cards to account, by printing Compliments of the Season, in a variety of coloured devices, on the backs of them; one of the advantages of their use being that they will make three persons happy, the sender, the receiver, and the postman who reads them as he runs.

THE VALUE OF TIME. - Dr. Austin Allibone, the eminent American bibliographer and biographer, who is one of those men that never lost a minute in his life, sends us the following card, which we commend to the attention of all young

The Value of Time.

A GOOD NAME.—Solomon says that this article is better than riches; in the book trade it is equal to them as the Rev. Newman Hall must have discovered, for we see that the New Edition of his "Come to Jesus" is numbered 1554th thousand!

The OLD BALLADS announced by Mr. Pearson have now made their appearance, and, in print and paper, are as near an imitation of the three vo-lumes of "Old Ballads" which were published in 1723-25 as the most curious collector could wish. Buyers of books of this nature are not the needy. The collection has been selling for from five to eight guineas, and, if quite perfect—that is, with the picture of the "Swimming Lady" in vol. 2 for even a higher price. All the plates have been reproduced, and the most fastidious will have no fault to find with the manner in which they are given. To those who are not acquainted with the collection, we may mention that the editor, who is supposed to have been Ambrose Phillips, collected many of the old heroic ballads of Deloney and Johnson, and supplemented them with others, some, we believe, from Martin Parker, whose effusions we commend to the notice of Mr. Pearson for republication. The first volume appeared in 1723, with a preface, in which the editor says: "I always put myself upon the Level with a Reader, and think myself under no manner of Obligation: If have his Money and he has my Works: and I am sure he may keep the one in his Study much and state the may keep the other in my Pocket. If there be any Beauties in the Book, 'tis certainly his Business to find them out: and if there ben'twhy he can't say I cheated him: I never pretended to give him anything more than an old Song." He then proceeds in praise of old songs, and how they have been orally handed down from generation to generation, and that by this means alone one half of our history has been preserved from oblivion. He then, after a fling at his Grub Street brethren-a race as much looked down upon then as now-presents us with a grand collection of ballads, each preceded by an introduction giving the chief incidents in the lives or events thus immortalised. The first is one that has ever been a favourite, Fair Rosamond, ornamented with a picture in which the jealous Queen Eleanor is offering the choice of a dagger or poison to the unfortunate At the end of the volume are half a dozen Scotch songs, including a version of "Bonny Dundee," and the announcement of a fresh volume. In the course of the same year the second volume was published; in the preface the editor almost apologises for some of the ballads, but he evidently saw more of their simple beauty than he liked to acknowledge. He, however, had a poor opinion of Shakspeare, and perhaps only expressed the general estimate in which the poet was held by coupling his name with that of Davenant. He speaks of going on with that of Davenant. He speaks of going on with the work, but had then "materials only for one volume more." This volume is by no means equal in interest to its predecessor. The editor was clearly unacquainted with the authorship of the ballads, and thought that he had an unlimited stock to draw upon; accordingly, we here have a number that are rather free than witty, some ballads of a more homely kind, and some Scotch songs. In the preface to one of the ballads, we have a glimpse of the editor's nationality and pre-judice. "This ballad was written in the reign of K. James I. And indeed that age so abounded with poets, that we owe almost half our historical ballads to it. Not that I believe they were first written at that time; but the language of 'em being grown so very obsolete, it was then refined, and the songs put into a new and more fashion-able dress. We are told by some criticks that we are not so much beholden to the number of Poets who lived at that time as to the number of Scots King James brought over with him; for our English bards, fearing the nation would be overfor our run with Scotchmen, and that the memory of our own worthies would perish; took care to revive all their historical ballads, and to disperse 'em amongst the people; not only to transmit their actions to posterity, but that the latest ages might see we did not owe our origin to the Scots."

Vol. 3 bears the date of 1725, and in addition to some historical ballads, contains several drinking songs, and a dozen or more from over the lorder. Notwithstanding all the praise given to Bishop Percy for his Collection of Ballads, more merit is in reality due to the collector of these three volumes, forty years before the Bishop's work appeared-a work which was then new neither in manner nor matter.

We are glad to see Mr. Pearson proceeding in this direction, for, with all their drawbacks, collections of this kind are too precious to be lost. We observe that Mrs. Aphra Behn's Works are to follow, and hope that Tom D'Urfey's "Pills" may appear SPELLING-BOOK BIBLIOGRAPHY. -- We are unable to resume this subject at present; but in our next article those spelling-books now in use, and the various "Standard Readers," will be noticed. We shall follow this by a notice of some popular American school books. Of the last-mentioned we shall be obliged by the receipt of any information, or shall be glad to receive copies of books, which may be addressed to the care of Mr. J. Vernon Whitaker, "Literary Gazette" Office, Ledger Building, Philadelphia, Penn.

BLACKWOOD'S DIARIES now consist of the old shilling Scribbling, so well known by its light green glazed cover, and the Thraday, each in foolscap folio, interleaved with blotting paper; and those in Octavo, bound in cloth, each possessing some distinctive character, and evidently produced by one who knows what the public require. Blackwood's Pocket Diaries are intended for the million; they are accordingly got up in a cheap, tasteful manner, with plenty for the money, coloured illuminated title-page and frontispiece, and are done up in roan tuck, with gilt edges. They consist of a Pocket Diary for gentlemen, National Pocket Book and Diary for either set, and a Pocket Book and Diary for ladies, with a most bewitching face by way of frontispiece. We think this must be in the wrong book, for surely gentlemen would like this, and ladies would like this are ladies would like this would like t like to see a handsome face of the opposite sex. CHILDREN'S TOY BOOKS. -The only novelty of the season in this interesting department of literature is the series introduced by Mr. Nimmo, which, without exception, is the most artistic and attractive ever produced. The pictures are good enough for guinea volumes.—The same publisher has also formers. has also forwarded specimens of his popular editions of the poets, in new and more elegant styles

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS OF THE SEASON. Although the days of the so-called Christmas Books are past, we yet have some that in point of excellence will vie with any of their predecessors. One of the most prominent of the present season is that published by Mr. Hotten, illustrating the works of English artists of the present century, including Wilkie, Turner, Mulready, Landseer, Maclise, and others, in a series of beautifully executed line engravings—the only book we have seen thus illustrated. seen thus illustrated.

Bell's Standard Elocutionist. (Belfast: William Mullan.)—The title-page will be found at full length in our list of books for the month; it is too long to repeat. The volume contains a lucid outline of the principles of elocution, sufficiently full to enable any person, whether pupil or teacher, to master the rules necessary for becoming a profi-cient in the art of speaking. Then follow selections, grave and gay, humorous and pathetic, poetry and prose, and both the last-named com-bined. This is a feature, we believe, peculiar to Mr. Bell's book. Many of the poems are printed as prose, and although apparently requiring less care in reading, they in reality require more.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"A COMMUNICATION."

We have received the following rambling "communication" through a correspondent of the London Dialectical Society, who, like Glendower, can call spirits from the vasty deep; but on comparing its style with that of the published works of Mr. Defoe, we have considerable doubts respecting its authenticity. The notes have been appended by the learned "medium" through whom the "communication" has been received.]

To the Author of "THE BOOKSELLER."

FRIEND BOOKSELLER,-Would you be surprised to hear that we are acquainted with some matters which take place upon the earth, and that although such things as silver and gold are of no interest to us now, there is one thing upon which we are still keenly sensitive, and that is our reputations. On this point we can either receive pleasure or pain; that is to say, as much pain as blessed spirits can feel, our pain being but an We have absence of pleasure, no actual sorrow. the privilege of meeting spirits from "another place," to which in their presence we make no allusion, their only real pleasure being the per-mission to visit our common room, and to hear the news which we are permitted to communicate. Some of this news is clearly very agreeable to them; some adds to the intensity of their punish-Beyond stating the fact of our meeting, it is not my intention to refer, nor am I permitted to gratify your readers by saying to which place any of those we meet belong. Some that you would least expect, I can assure you, are our constant companions, and others whose reputation for holiness was such that I hoped to have the pleasure of personal acquaintance, have apparently their missed their way.

Naturally we have our coteries. Those who invoked the profane Muses are here; those who, like our friend Milton, invoked their heavenly sisters, are also present. There is "Bacon's set," "Newton's lot," "the Preachers," "the Politicians"-each individual seeking out those of a similar taste to himself. I was admitted to "the Poets," not because I was much of a poet, but because I writ works of imagination. I am also admitted to the Political, the Historical, the Economical, and various other coteries.

We have lately been discussing the question of copy-money, copyright, and free trade in literature, and have been much amused at the quantity of what I believe you now call "bosh" that has lately appeared in one of your newspapers. Some of your modern authors appear to have no more soul than a codfish (a), no desire for immortality, nor any wish that soars above the vulgar greed of copy-money. In my day we desired reputation, and we attained it. Not, as Mister Milton says, by puffs of the press, but by our merits. friend Shakspeare never had a review in his life, and the notice taken of my writings was frequently of an unpleasant nature. (b) But we were rewarded (c) by "that last infirmity of a noble mind," fame; and anything that detracts therefrom either causes positive pain or deprives us of pleasure. We are nearly all upon a common level; only two or three of our set have written works which are not free to all the world; and each successive reprint sends a thrill of pleasure such only as the beatified can fully experience, or "the others" completely enjoy. Judge, then, of our astonishment when we hear such words made use of as "perpetual copyright." When honest (d) John Bunyan first heard it mentioned, he nearly committed an impropriety, by recurring to one of his old unreformed habits. "In good sooth," said he, as soon as he recovered himself, "Mr. Worldly Wiseman must have come in the flesh. I would rather my daughter's great-grandchildren a hundred times removed should sell tagged laces outside a jail, than that readers should be de-prived of one copy of my 'Pilgrim.' I never (e) 'entered' a book in my life, and truly I rejoiced greatly when my book was printed by others, till some lying varlets writ and printed second and third parts, and called them mine. Verily, I could have cudgelled their shallow pates for their im-pudence." "Perpetual copyright!" chimed in Milton. "Did the chapman Simmons suppose that for five pounds all the world was to bow the knee to him and pay tribute to his sharp practices?"(f) Very lately, too, Byron (g), who is said to have been by no means a man of moral lip, was —————— for humming a lay containing some improper lines, and was only let off when he explained that the reason for his sudden joy was that his poems were now free to all. Who would have been acquainted with the writings of Homer (k), of Moses (1), or of David (m), or descending to later times, of Chaucer(n), of Burns(o)—(it will interest you to know that Burns and Scott () had a discussion upon this very point)—of Cowper (q), or of any other writer, if their works were copyright, and only to be had at publishers' fancy prices, in quarto? PRINTERS' LAW.

To the Editor of "THE BOOKSELLER."

SIR,-Permit me to draw the attention of such of your subscribers as are practical printers to the fact that they cannot recover at law the amount of their bill for printing any work to which they have not appended their imprints. My reason for writing is that I have lately seen several books without any printer's name attached; and although no respectable publisher would be dishonest enough to take advantage of this, there are some publishers, I regret to say, who appear capable of anything. I have been bitten, and therefore desire to warn my brethren of the trade. Your obedient servant,

OBITUARY.

Oct. 1.—At Otley, near Leeds, aged 75, Mr. William Walker, bookseller and publisher. William Walker was born in Otley on December 3, 1795; and at the early age of twelve was apprenticed to a Mr. Lawton, bookseller and bookbinder, in the same town, under whom he rapidly mastered all that could be taught him, and at sixteen, with a small capital not easily obtained, purchased his old master's business. He worked with the old wooden printing-press, requiring three pulls for one impression, and his inking apparatus wanted neither complicated moulds, nor glue, treacle, &c. It consisted of the then universal pair of "peltballs," which required more dexterity and manual labour than printers' apprentices would devote to the art nowadays. With these aids, and a very ordinary stock of binding tools, he laboured hard from sunrise till sunset. He was an able elocutionist and a perfect "proof reader," and he leaves behind him, among other works, "An Abridgement of the English Grammar;" but he is perhaps better known by the children of Great Britain than by its adults, though even their childhood's recollections are mingled with "Walker's Toybooks." Otley seemed then, and is now, mysteriously connected with every nursery legend of the good old sort. Who cannot recollect "Mother Hubbard," "Jack the Giant Killer," "Cinderella," "Goody Two-Shoes," "Tom Thumb," and a host of other little brochures always bearing the imprint "William Walker, Otley?" Mr. Walker possessed inventive capacities of the highest order, and took to himself the credit of having originated the celebrated printing machine works of Wharfdale. He it was who first employed Mr. Dawson upon machinery, a trade soon to be developed by the aid of Mr. Payne's mechanical genius. Mr. Walker invented a "plough" cutting machine, and in other ways added mechanical aids to his business, which had the effect of simplifying its multifarious details. He was also the first printer in Yorkshire who used the stereotype process. His works have been a school of instruction for more than half a century to hundreds of workmen who are now in business for themselves in many parts of the country. They will hear of his death with regret, and will recollect him as a thorough master of the intricate details of their business, and as an employer who was the first to recognize talent and honour it. He died after a short but severe illness of eight days, and was in-

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

OF F History of English Literature. By H. A. Taine. s notic Translated by II. van Laun, one of the Masters of the Edinburgh Academy. Vol. I. (Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.)—M. Taine, one of the most prominent of the Parisian journalists, would have : clieb probably remained for some time longer unknown to the English public but for the recent translation of 1 his "Notes on England" in the columns of the Daily 0:12 News. These notes, which appeared in the Paris Temps, contain just that mixture of praise and blame which is the characteristic of English, rather than 1.00 of French, criticism. No people in the world are so apt at self-criticism as the English, but they are very thin-skinned in respect to what may be said of them by foreigners. Sharp hits at our national weaknesses-such, for instance, as those made by Nathaniel Hawthorne-are as ill received by us as were Dickens's "American Notes" in the United States. But with M. Taine the praise so greatly overbalances the blame, that even the most vainglorious of Englishmen would gladly accept the latter for the sake of the former. As in his "Essays on English Authors" and in his "Notes on England," so in his present work, the contrasts between English and foreign literature are nearly always in favour of the former; and he sees in the writings of our Shakspeare, Jonson, and Milton qualities which he fails to discover in the works of their French contemporaries. His aim is high. In "writing the history of a literature he sought the psychology of a people." "I had," he says, "to find a people with a grand and complete literature; and this is rare. Among the ancients, the Latin literature is worth nothing at the outset-more borrowed and imitative. Among the moderns, German literature is almost wanting for two centuries-1550 to 1750. Italian literature and Spanish literature end at the middle of the seventeenth century. I have chosen England because, being yet alive, and subject to direct examination, it may be better studied than a destroyed civilization, of which we can but retain the scraps; and because, being different from France, it has, in the eyes of a Frenchman, a more distinct character. Besides "—he goes on to remark-"there is a peculiarity in this civilization that, apart from its spontaneous development, it presents a forced deviation; it has suffered the last and most effectual of all conquests, and the three grounds whence it has sprung—race, climate, the Norman invasion-may be observed in its remains with perfect exactness; so well, that we may examine in this history the two most powerful moving springs of human transformation, natural bent and constraining force; and we examine them, without uncertainty or guess, in a series of authentic and unmutilated memorials. I have endeavoured to define these primary springs, and to explain how they have ended by bringing to light great political, religious, and literary works, and by developing the recondite mechanism whereby the Saxon barbarian has been transformed into the Englishman of to-day." And then he begins at the beginning, and describes the England of the Saxon era-marsh, waste, shoal; rivers that hardly drag themselves through the mud of primeval forests; moist green meadows, and wild furzy commons—a joyless and poverty-stricken soil! At length come the Normans, and all is But, with a national leaning quite excusable, he considers our Norman conquerors to have been French, instead of -- as they werewarlike hordes of Norsemen, who, having previously overrun and possessed the fairest lands in France, came across the narrow seas in search of newer and richer conquests. Bede and the Saxon Chronicles he traces the progress of our literature through the feudal ages to the times of Richard Cour de Lion and the Ballads of Robin Hood, and thence to the Vision of Piers Ploughman and the appearance of Wycliff's translation of the Bible. Much that appears in M. Taine's first two chapters is mythical, conjectural, and without absolute authority; as, for instance, the horrible legend of Richard I., in the Holy Land, having dined off a Saracen babe, because his cook had no pork; and then, when he was shown the "head of the pig" by the trembling servitor, "fell a-laughing," and declared that "the army had nothing to fear from famine with such good food at hand." But in his next chapsuch good nood at name. But in his next chap-ter he gets upon firm ground, for he has to deal with Geoffrey Chaucer, "a man of mark, inven-tive though a disciple, original though a translator, who, by his genius, education, and life, was enabled to depict a whole world; but, above all, to satisfy the chivalric world and the splendid courts that shone upon the heights." He admires Chaucer, and considers him—as he wasthe true father of modern English literature. Chaucer, Gower, Occleve and Lydgate, the whole of his third chapter is devoted; and in his fourth he treats of what he terms the English Renaisinto prose, and Christianity "gave place to free belief and an improved orthodoxy;" when superfluousness, pettiness, pedantry, and agreeableness triumphed over energy and scholarship, to be in their turn overcome by the philosophy of a Bacon and the genius of a Shakspeare. Then we come to three most interesting chapters on the Stage, with ample notes of the sixteenth-century dramatists—Nash and Deckker, Lodge and Green, Marlowe and Peele, Beaumont and Fletcher, Ford them all, William Shakspeare—a galaxy of writers such as can be found in no other country, and at no other period in the world's history. We can forgive the author's frequent references to Molière and Voltaire in our admiration for his genuine appreciation of our English poets and dra-Of Shakspeare he says: "All came from within; I mean from his soul and his He was bound up with the age; he knew the manners of country, court, and town, and had visited the heights, depths, and middle regions of the condition of mankind." And then, after going over the legendary account of the poet's youth and manhood, and slightly referring to his principal works, he winds up with an eloquent eulogium:—"Let us look for the man in his style. The style explains the work; whilst showing the principal features of his genius, it infers the rest. When we have once grasped the dominant faculty, we see the whole artist developed like a flower!"
The remaining chapters of this first volume are devoted to the Religious Renaissance, Milton, and the Restoration, in which latter chapter our author is equally hard upon the "Roysterers," the "Worldlings," and the "Puritans;" and, while acknowledging the genius of Dryden, Butler, Wycherley, Congreve, and the rest, cannot dis-guise from himself that, despite the influence of Molière upon the stage of that day, their plays were no great gain to the literature of the period; adverting severely upon their grossness, frivolity, and "shameless magnificence." M. Taine annotates his work throughout, and shows us the sources of his information: and, so far as this first volume enables us to judge, his "History of Eng-lish Literature" is worthy its subject and an honour to its author.

Faust: A Tragedy. By Johann Wolfgang von pethe. Translated in the original metres, by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. crown 8vo. (Strahan.)
—"Faust," like the "Iliad," is a poem which tempts a translation. Of the first part there have been more than a score of versions already made, and of these it is impossible to say which will occupy the position maintained in popularity by Pope's translation of Homer. Goethe's great work, equally with that of the Greek, possesses elements of the deepest human interest. the author himself once described the production. it permanently preserves the period of develop-ment of a human soul tormented by all that afflicts mankind, shaken also by all that dis-turbs it, repelled by all that it finds repellent, and made happy by all which it desires, That such a performance should form a crucial test of the extent of a translator's poetical insight and general literary ability is not to be wondered at. All who have imposed upon themselves the task of rendering "Faust" into English have advanced some special reasons for the special methods they employ. The poor translator has his excuse they employ. for giving us his work in prose, and the author of any favourite poetical form advances arguments by which he hopes to justify his choice. Mr. Bayard Taylor, the latest comer, after twenty years of thought and labour, founds his claim to our notice upon the fact that he has given us a version in the metres used by Goethe himself. This, in itself, is obviously not sufficient for success. It is possible for a translator to make a rendering of an original author in the original metres, and yet fail in the essentials of literalness, of beauty, and of spirit. There might be a c)py without the handling of the master, as there might be a paraphrase which could produce upon us the same effect as that of the original work. We cannot agree with Mr. Taylor in his opinion that the difference between a translation of "Faust" in prose or metre is chiefly one of labour. So many qualities are necessary for the reproduction in one language of a masterpiece in another, that something beyond labour is needed in the reproducer. We may at once say that Mr. Taylor appears to us to have brought to his task not only the faculty of work, but the poetic insight, and such a command over the niceties of our language as enables him to give adequate expression to his ideas. Every work—more especially such a work as this of Goethe—has idiosyncratic excellences which cannot be transferred to another language; or, as Mr. Taylor expresses it, has so delicate a bloom that it can in no wise be preserved. But our author has overcome such difficulty triumphantly. The capabilities of the Eaglith Indiana. bilities of the English language in his hands bare received full justice. As Mr. Taylor modestly observes, "The difficulties in the way of a nearly literal translation of 'Faust' in the original metres have been exaggerated, because original metrics have continued anguages have not been properly considered. With all the splendour of versification in the work, it contains but few metres of which the English is not equally capable." He confesses that the more closely he reproduced the language of the original, the more of the rhythmical character of the poem was at the same time transferred. Accordingly, with the exception of slight liberties with one or two lyrical passages, the leaving an occasional line unrhymed when it was rhymed in the original, and the insertion of a few imperfect rhymes, this translation may, as to form, be considered an adequate transcript of the German work. We need not discuss the various theories of translation that have been propounded, but are willing to agree with Mr. Taylor that we have so many instances of the possibility of "reciprocally transferring the finest qualities of English and German poetry that there is no sufficient excus for an unmetrical translation of 'Faust.'" In these words the author of the present version has exposed his work to severe criticism; but we think he has amply fulfilled the promise he has explicitly made. The first part of "Faust" is too well known to permit of our discussing it design or treatment. We can only say that the present translation has all the merits of Mr. Brooks's work, executed on the same principles, and additional merits of its own. The rhythmical character of the poem has been retained throughout, and, whilst the power and beauty of Goethe's diction are seldom missed, its true spirit is retained.

We are unwilling to admit that Mr. Hayward's prose translation is open to the objec-tions brought against it by Mr. Taylor. The agreement among English critics that this translation, apart from the view that form in poetry is of secondary importance, is a standard among the numerous versions published, we can fully appreciate. In fulness of import, exact rendering of the original, and thorough appreciation of the subtle meanings of Goethe, Mr. Hayward is not likely to be superseded. The lapses indicated by Mr. Taylor, who has manifestly made himself familiar with the text, are only of slight consequence. Any student well acquainted with Mr. Hayward's rendering of the first part of "Faust may, indeed, consider himself acquainted with the tone and spirit of the German original. Still there is a large class of readers with whom form is a consideration, and to those we may recommend the present translation as the best for their It is at once literal, conveying the exact meaning of the German version, and presents us with the very metres and rhythm in which Goethe wrote,

Of the second part of "Faust" we do not share the views of Mr. Taylor, nor do we think that his success therein has been so great as in the first. It is true this part was included in Goethe's original design; but we are unwilling to admit that without it the first part "is in reality but a fragment, wherein the deeper problems upon which the work is based are left unsolved." In fact, we infer, not only from the work itself but from existing historical and biographical evidence, that the first part is in itself a complete tragic episode. Goethe was fond of mystification. He often played the old soldier. As he refused to point out the passage in "Werther" to which Napoleon objected, so he persistently declined to give an explanation of any allegorical difficulty which was He enjoyed hearing the sought by his friends. abstruse meaning placed by his admirers on what to him was simple, or had no meaning; just as Turner used to enjoy the mystical explanations which Mr. Ruskin and others gave to his paintings. In the second part he took liberties with the language. His forms are wild and often unintelligible; and, instead of pretending to find a meaning where none exists, we should be satisfied with the result for what it is worth, as the outcome of a great man in his later years. Mr. Taylor has conscientiously done his best to give coherence and unity to the work, and we are thankful. To each part the translator has added a large body of notes, historical, geographical, biographical, philological, and poetical, which embody the result of a vast amount of study, and which will enable the student to make himself acquainted with all that is necessary. neceessary for a thorough comprehension of "Faust" and its author.

By Charles Hodge, D.D. Systematic Theology. 8vo. (Nelson.) Dr. Hodge, professor in the Theological Seminary, Princeton, New Jersey, intends to complete this work in three volumes. There is no copyright for the book in this country, but Messrs. Nelson have made an honourable arrangement with the author and with the American publishers, Messrs. Scribner, for the republication in Great Britain, and they have produced it at a moderate price. Let us hope that, after having expended time, labour, and money in producing and making it known here, no other publisher will be so dishonest or dishonourable as to reprint it, and thus steal from Messrs. Nelson what is their undoubted We mention this now because this is the first occasion on which we have had to speak, since the revival of the question, of international copyright, and the hard words used about "piracy" by persons who clearly do not understand the meaning of the term. Had no arrangement been made, in consequence of too high terms having been demanded, had Messrs. Nelson reproduced the book at an exorbitant price, or had there been any other reasonable cause for doing it, there would be neither dishonesty nor dishonour in re-printing it against Messrs. Nelson; but as they have done all that reasonable men of business could be expected to do, we are disposed to think that any one now reprinting against them would "pirate" their ideas and steal their property. Perhaps it may appear hard to define when and how such books may be reprinted; but we think honourable, upright men will have no difficulty in deciding upon the proper limits.

The BOOKSELLER is not theological, and can therefore pronounce no opinion upon the soundness or orthodoxy of Dr. Hodge; but, having looked somewhat carefully through this volume, we are disposed to think that it fills a void in our literature. We are deficient in what may be termed descriptive theology, i.e., defining the dif-ferent doctrines held by Christians; writers have been afraid or unable to say what they think or believe. We find the difficulty in ourselves; we too frequently have undefined notions of the most important subjects, and most of us have never put our own ignorance to the test. Let our reader ask himself what is his own opinion of-say the very prime religious idea—GOD—Who and What is He? What His form, His nature—Where? Unless we are greatly mistaken, our reader will be startled at the shallowness of his knowledge and the small amount of thought that he has ever given to the subject. Perhaps we laymen are not altogether to blame; our "teachers, spiritual pastors and masters," have not "got up" the subject, and consequently could not teach us that of which they themselves were ignorant. reason for this has been the want of suitable books such as this by Dr. Hodge.

Unfortunately for us critics, there is no preface, nothing from which we, as is our wont, may crib our criticisms; for lack of which we must content ourselves by saying that the subjects treated of are—1, Theology and its methods of study, Rationalism, Mysticism, and Romanism, and the Protestant rule of Faith; 2, Theology proper, in which the origin and idea of God, Theism and Atheism are treated of; then chapters on the knowledge of God, His nature and attributes; the Trinity; Divinity of Christ; the personality and work of the Holy Spirit; the decrees of God; Creation; Providence; Miracles; and, lastly, the Angels. We believe this to be a valuable book, and one that should be in the hands not only of all theological students, but of all those already engaged in the work of the ministry; and that by making it known our readers will be doing good service, not only to their own pastors, but, through them, to their neighbours and fellow parishioners.

The Life of Jesus the Christ, eecher. 8vo. (Nelson an By Henry Ward (Nelson and Sons.) - Mr. Beecher is remarkable for what he says, and no less remarkable for his mode of saying it. Unlike too many other preachers, he never preaches a sermon that has not been well thought over, and in preaching, he, like one of old, "seeks to find out acceptable words," so that both in matter and manner there is always something worth reading in the books published by Mr. Beecher. is not a critical life of Christ; it is neither imagin-Taking the Gospels as he ative nor apologetical. finds them, and in the full belief of their genuineness, the author has, in his own eloquent manner. put together the facts of our Saviour's life up to the conclusion of the Sermon on the Mount. turally the material, in the hands of such a full and ready writer as Mr. Beecher, was ample, and we find ourselves interested in apparently minor and insignificant details of events many of which we had frequently passed by as of little moment. Those who are acquainted with Mr. Beecher's previous works will not be surprised to find that he has in this managed to extract honey where others can only find gall, and that even in speaking of such things as the reverence paid to Mary by the Roman Catholics, he can amidst the evil see much that is undoubtedly good.

Jesus Christ, His Life and Work. By E. De Pressense, D.D. Translated by Annie Harwood. (Hodder and Stoughton.)—Two Fcap 8vo. "Lives of Christ," coming out in the same month, ought to satisfy orthodox Christians that there is some life still remaining in the Gospels, and that they have not been altogether swept away by Strausses or Rénans. The larger work, of which Strausses or Renans. The larger work, of which this is an abridgment, Dr. Pressensé says, reached its third edition in eight months, and this, which contains all the substance of that, merely leaving out what was purely scientific, will have a still larger sale. If this be found to meet the want, may we suggest that a still cheaper edition is required, one at sixpence or a shilling, so that by an active effort a copy might be placed in the hands of all Sunday-school teachers. This work, though cheap enough for ordinary persons, is not sufficiently cheap for the million.

Lessons on the Life of Christ, for the Little Ones at Home. By II. L. L., one of the Authors of 'Ilymns from the Land of Luther."—Above we have spoken of two 'Lives of Christ' appearing in one month. We should have said three, for this pretty little volume is, in reality, a third; but in the form of stories on the chief events.

Sacred Allegories. By the late Rev. Edward Monro. Fcap. 8vo. (Masters.)—It is needless to speak of the "Dark River" or other allegories Churchmen, and, in point of interest, are only second to those of the author of the "Old Man's Home." This, however, is the first time they have been published in a handsome volume, although, we believe, several editions of the separate allegories collected into a volume have been Monro was no common writer, Nor was he a common teacher. Gifted with a brilliant imagination, he would, almost without premeditation, dash off into one of these stories, entrancing all around; but, like many others, he had not the talent of industry-consequently. when the stories appeared in print, there was want of care and finish which a more pl author would have given. With all the backs, however, the stories are admiralwill be long remembered.

4. Zadkiel's Almanack for 1872, containing Predictions of the Weather, Voices of the Stars, and a Hieroglyphic for the Year of Discord.

Without doubt this is an age of wonders. Political and dynastic changes succeed each other with unexampled rapidity; "revivals" are frequently taking place in religious bodies; strikes and other signs of discontent with the existing state of society are of continual occurrence among the working classes; what is called by some philosophical scepticism, and by others practical atheism, is daily taking a stronger hold on the public mind; important, delicate questions are openly, and sometimes fiercely, discussed by the people; and everywhere are observed symptoms of social disorder. Concurrently with all these, the pheno-mena known as "spiritual manifestations" have forced themselves to the front, and demand investigation. Nearly two years ago the members of the Dialectical Society determined to make such an investigation as was within their power, and to For that purpose, they apreport the result. pointed a committee, which subsequently held meetings, received written communications, examined witnesses, and otherwise collected evidence in favour of, and in opposition to, the theory of supernatural communication between the living and the dead. This report, as now published, contains a digest of the proceedings of the general and the dead. committee, and of the six experimental sub-committees subsequently formed. In the list of these committees we find the names of one doctor of divinity, four doctors of medicine, two members of the College of Surgeons, a doctor of philosophy, a serieant at law and a barrister, a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, a fellow of the Geo-logical Society, a lady, and numerous Esquires. The several committees held fifteen meetings, received written statements from thirty-one persons, and examined some forty witnesses. Among the writers were the late Robert Chambers, who carefully guarded himself from expressing any belief in the theory; Lord Lytton, who considers Spiritualism a delusion; Mr. William Howitt, a thorough believer; Professor Huxley, who, while excusing himself from discussing the question, declares that the only case of so-called Spiritualism he ever witnessed was a "gross imposture;" and Mr. Newton Crossland (the writer of the now famous pamphlet on the Eltham Mur-der), who states that by "being too early in the field in the advocacy of the cause" he has lost £600 a-year, and is in consequence now "obliged to work hard." Nevertheless, he considers the subject "profound, complicated, instructive, fas-cinating, and ennobling," and the facts evolved cinating, and ennobling," and the facts evolved "as certain and indisputable as those of the mul-tiplication-table." The witnesses were even more Mr. Home, with characteristic boldness, explicit. Mr. Home, with characteristic boldness, considered that certain things only "happened to him when he was in a trance;" that he sometimes "found himself floating in the air;" that he was occasionally able "to take live coals in his hands without raising a blister;" and that "territualization was airleast a least that the statement of the second of the sec "spiritualism was either a gigantic imposture, or a matter worthy the deepest inquiry." The committee appeared to agree with both postulates, and, according to the tenor of their report, with the one that came first. Mr. E. I., Blanchard, the pantomime writer, stated that he had seen spirit hands, heard spirit voices, and was undoubtedly a firm believer in spiritual manifesta-tions; Mr. Lowenthal, the chess-player, was compelled against his will to be a believer; Lord Lindsay had heard raps and seen apparitions; but they did not much surprise him, as many members of his family were gifted with "second sight;" Mr. Hain Friswell always knew how to confound the spirits by anathematising them "in the name of the Trinity;" but it appears that he always did so in Greek! Dr. Anna Blackwell contended that as everything in this world progressed, so Spiritualism would progress till its truth was admitted alike by philosophers and clowns; and, after all, the result of the committee's investigation is simply-nil. They saw, heard, and considered; and finally avow that they cannot tell whether Spiritualism be true or false, though their leaning is certainly towards the latter conclusion.

towards the latter concussion.

Mr. Patrick Procter Alexander, in his little volume explains the modus operandi of raps, voices, and other manifestations. He attended scances given by Mr. Home in Edinburgh, and was not a "charlatan" and a "humbug," but a genuine seeker after the truth; though even he is compelled to admit—in common with the committee of the Dialectical Society—that the raps and other phenomena are only completely producible under favourable circumstances, and in the absence of scientific doubters. He confesses he went to scoff, and remained, if not to pray, at least to believe in the reality of Spiritualism.

Of Professor Zerffi's treatise we had occasion to speak in the last BOOKSELLER; it is only necessary to add that he is at issue with the spiritualists on all points but one, namely, that it is a really pleasant and profitable speculation.

All these investigators are, however, inferior to He has no doubts whatever as to the Zadkiel. truth of his predictions and the thorough genuineness of his mission. Mr. Home, like Prospero, may have his Familiar Spirits; but Zadkiel alone is able to deal with them on purely scientific principles, and to shape their utterances into such oracular phrases that, come what may, he is never wrong. Happen what will, his hieroglyphic for the coming year is always correct; no matter how often his pretentions are exposed, the number of fools in the world is always large enough to secure a remunerative sale. Last year, he tells use—and of course what he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when he says is true—"I sold use—and of course when nearly 85,000 (eighty-five thousand!) copies of my almanack." It seems more than probable that among his patrons were at least some of the gentlemen who voluntarily related their experiences of Spiritual Manifestations at the several meetings of the Dialectical Society. Doubtless, if respectfully applied to, the majority of them would sign Zadkiel's petition to the House of Commons for a repeal of such clauses of the Vagrant Act as render fortune-tellers liable to certain disagrecable pains "Any number of postage stamps, and penalties. from one shilling upwards, may," we are informed,

A Shadow of Dante. Being an Essay towards Studying Himself, his World, and his Pilgrimage.
By Maria Francesca Rossetti. (Rivingtons.)
Dante, more than all poets, ancient, medieval, or modern, is the most difficult to understand. It is impossible to learn his meaning without illustrative explanations, personal, historical, poetical; and when we seek the aid of commentators, we find they all differ. The latest guide which offers us assistance through this most difficult literary labyrinth is Miss Francesca Rossetti, a member of a family which has in numerous ways identified itself with the fame of the great Florentine poet. Miss Rossetti has loving reverence for him to whom she ascribes, not Italy, but the universe, as his birthplace; not the fourteenth century, but all time, as his epoch! The Divina Commedia has been translated into our language again and again, and every version has had its purchasers and admirers; but we agree with Miss Rossetti, that not only are the majority even of our educated countrymen little acquainted with the scope and spirit of the original, but that those who have learned Italian look upon Dante in his native tongue as too far above their attainments. Henceforth there is little excuse for such students. work before us is devoted to a consideration of the poet as a man, of his time, and contemporaries, and of the spiritual pilgrimage, or poeti-cal life of the man. In each of these divisions Miss Rossetti has accumulated essential facts, and gives such explanations as will enable every reader to become better acquainted with the great literary outcome of the middle ages than he can hope to be from the work of any preceding interpreter. The abstract disquisitions with which the poem abounds, the local and personal allusions, the fictions of the poet's theology, the scientific truths according to the highest attainment of the period in fact, everything external to the work-has thorough explanation; and, besides this, the motive of the poem and its chief incidents are quoted, so that in short compass we have the story and adequate commentary. A peculiar feature of the volume are the illustrations, which consist of "The Universe," "The Hell," "The Purgatory," and "The Rose of the Blessed," each of them evidently the result of profound thought and care. Dante's portrait by Giotto, and his death mask, form the frontispiece. A work so obviously the result of loving regard and literary ability has

The Inn of Strange Meetings, and other Poems. By Mortimer Collins. (Henry S. King.) In a "curious Gothic building many-angled," is laid the scene of the legend, told in musical verse, which culminates in love and a moral:—

"Ah, the happy time!
And Love's immortal light, transcending rhyme,
Smote my dull life with a miraculous ray.

Chilary's true."

The Other Poems, which, indeed, make up nine-tenths of the volume, are devoted to varied topics—"The Poet's Philosophy," "An Old Almanack," "A Sprig of May," "An Old Fogy on Christmas," "Song by the River," "Coming of Age," and other vers de société of greater or lesser interest, which probably made their first appearance in magazines. Some of them are real poems, others mere sprigs of rhymes; but it is only fair to say that the poems are in a decided majority: two or three, as "My old coat," "Windermere," and "The Magic Fountain," might be set to music and sung with effect. Mr. Mortimer Collins, better known as a novelist than a poet, has done well in collecting and publishing his fugitive verses. They will shed no discredit on his reputation.

Rays from the East; or, Illustrations of the Holy Scriptures. Derived principally from the Manners, Customs, Rites, and Antiquities of Eastern Nations. (Religious Tract Society.)—To properly understand the force and beauty of the allusions in the Old Testament, and to fully appreciate the description of its writers, it is necessary that we possess some acquaintance at least with Oriental scenery and the manners of Eastern nations. To the mere English reader such phrases as the "covenant of salt," the "colour of the lips," "cleanness of teeth," and "crushed at the gate," are hardly intelligible; but, by aid of such a volume as this, he soon learns that these He-braisms stand for a "friendly contest," "praises and thanksgivings," "extreme scarcity," and "found guilty in a court of justice." And so with other customs universal in Eastern cities:—

"Watchman, what of the night?" referring, "Watchman, what of the might receiving, for instance, to the shrill, piercing cry of the Egyptian watchman, as he parades the streets and calls out the hour; and, again, "Ten women shall bake bread at one oven," pointting to the still common practice of building a public oven in the centre of the village, to which the housewives may bring their kneaded dough to bake it into loaves, without cost and without trouble. The frequent references to the washing of the feet, the putting off the shoes before entering the house or the temple, and the attentions paid by the host to the stranger within his gate, are explained by the fact that travellers in the parched and sandy deserts of Arabia often go barefoot, or wear only sandals, which resemble our shoes only in the fact that they possess a wooden or leather sole, which is fastened to the foot by means of straps round the ankles. The story in Genesis of Abraham entertaining the angels unawares finds its frequent counterpart, even now, in Turkey, Persia, and India; and even the very terms of the welcome accorded are such as are in use in the present day. "Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree." And when we come to think of the heat of the shadeless deserts, we can well comprehend the comfort and delight of the weary sojourner as he rests for a while under the impervious cedar, or lies beneath the broad leaves of the welcome fig-tree. Something of the Englishman's love of trees may perhaps be traced to his early acquaintance with Scripture story, in which the trees are so frequently referred toolive and its oil, the umbrageous cedar, and the pleasant fig. These, and a hundred other topics and phrases familiar to readers of Scripture, are satisfactorily explained and exemplified; each subject being amply, and indeed exquisitely, illustrated in a series of appropriate woodcuts, some on full pages and others inserted in the text. a Christmas present or New Year's gift, we have as yet seen no more handsome and useful volume.

Meadows's French Dictionary. 18mo. (Tegg.)

—Not having the preceding edition of this work at hand, we cannot say to what extent it has been improved and enlarged. The English title-page says that it has been entirely rearranged, corrected, and enlarged by about 2,000 new words, idiomatic expressions, and proverbs, and a list of the usual Christian and proper names, and names of countries and nations, by M. Krueger, French master in the Aberdeen Grammar School. The dictionary now appears to be very complete, and well adapted for schools. All the words we have tested it by are correct, and we find some which show the lateness of the date up to which the additions have been made. Does any reader know what "Diabolitans" are?

The Vagabond. By Mrs. Marshall Ward. (Bemrose and Sons.)—A real story of a real life, well and naturally told. This is the verdict deliberately arrived at after a careful trial. To which the literary judge may add—the story is full of incident, both amusing and pathetic, so life-like as to interest the reader from its very starting-point, and following each other in such regular sequence, as to carry him on to the end instructed and unwearied.

The Adventures of Harry Richmond. George Meredith. (Smith. Elder, and Co.)—In the middle of the night, in the depths of winter, there came a violent knocking and ringing at the front door of Reversley Grange, the residence of Squire Beltham, in Hampshire. There was fright and alarm in the household, and the squire himself was rudely awakened out of his first sleep, which, as he was a somewhat free liver, was generally pretty sound. The impatient visitor was at last admitted to the hall, and then and there, with little ceremony, claimed to see his wife, the daughter of the squire. He had been four years away, and the squire had declared him a scamp. Much confusion and loud talking followed his demand, but the squire resisted stoutly, and declared that his daughter should never be permitted to see the wretched man within his walls. With a fierce imprecation, the visitor then demanded to see his child, and, in order to restrain his violence, the boy was awakened, dressed quickly, and brought down. Then came a long and angry parley, which ended only in the man suddenly retreating, with the boy in his arms. This boy is the Harry Richmond of the story. His father, who is at this time under a cloud, and in some mortal jeopardy, keeps him with him for a time, and takes him into all kinds of strange Bohemian company. At last he sends him to school, and disappears. school life of the young hero, admirably described, is happy enough for a while; but at last he runs away, and falls in with some gypsies, by whom he is taken back to his grandfather. Here he remains for several months, till his anxiety for his father's fate is awakened by the passing remark of a stranger. And then—but the book itself must be read to discover his further adventures. Suffice it that they are numerous and exciting, the natural and unforced style of the author giving the story an air of reality seldom acquired by any but thorough masters of fiction.

The Pocket Chess Problem Recorder is the title of a very useful little book lately issued by Messrs. Thos. De la Rue and Co. By its means the chessplayer may easily and permanently record end-games, problems, and interesting positions. In-stead of writing the letters B K, W Q, &c., on blank problem-forms, separate figures of the Black King, White Queen, and the other pieces, gummed at the back, are detached from a perforated page, and at once fastened in their proper places on the diagrams. If this "Re-corder" could be produced at a somewhat cheaper rate, it would soon be adopted by all masters of chess problems.

The Church's Work in our Large Towns. By George Huntingdon, M.A., Rector of Tenby. Plenty of books have already been written upon this subject. It has formed the topic of discussion at hundreds of clerical meetings, has figured in Episcopal charges innumerable, and will probably figure in hundreds more. It is not a subject for discussion, but for practice. The clergy-man who will solve the problem is not one who in his study will sit down and write about it, nor figure at clerical meetings; but one who will diligently, quietly, lovingly set to work. It may be that he will not be heard of out of his own parish, will not be a frequent visitor at the bishop's parties, and may be sneered at for unclerical, unparties, and may be sneered at for undertent, unecclesiastical practices; may not be correct in his vestments, nor perfect in his ritualism, nor quite "respectable" in the society he cherishes; still, such a man may have found out how to do "the Church's work in our large towns." None will be the worse for reading Mr. Huntingdon's volume, but the problem is practical not theoretical but the problem is practical, not theoretical.

Master John Bull: a Holiday Book for Parents and Schoolmasters. By Ascott R. Hope. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo.)—With a quotation from Juvenal on its title-page, a translation from "De Gentilitate," by way of advertisement, 15 page of Introductory Remarks, 6 pages of Preface, a fanciful autobiography of 112 pages, a Dedication of 4 pages, and 26 pages devoted to imag-nary "Letters to the Author," surely there should be something worth reading in the book itself, which consists of 85 pages only, with an appendix of 20 at the end. Dismissing all the prefatory matter, as being merely laudatory of Ascott R. Hope, and therefore of little interest to any one else, we come to "Master John Bull," and find that the ten chapters so headed contain lectures to schoolmasters and mistresses, and much unsolicited advice to the powers that be on the education, manners, and general training of youthan important topic truly, but, as here treated, not likely to attract much notice. Mr. Hope has been so unreservedly praised in the press, and so cordially received by the public, that he has at last come to take liberties with both. The whole book looks like an elaborate joke; and when the joker is a pedagogue, it is not difficult to conceive that the production is somewhat heavy. This book is a mistake, which is to be regretted, seeing that Mr. Hope's previous works contained much good common sense, embodied, it must be confessed, in a vast number of words. But this might be naturally expected of a man who has the modesty to say, as Mr. Hope says in his Dedication, Whatever I am, I claim to be original!"

Difficulties of the Day and How to Med Then.
Eight Sermons preached at St. Augustine's Church, Queen's Gate, by the Rev. E. S.
Ffoulkes, B.D. (Hayes.)—Mr. Ffoulkes, it may be remembered leight the Boney Church some be remembered, joined the Roman Church some years ago, and, disagreeing with some of its tents, has since returned to the Church of England. These Sermons, the first-fruits of his renewed ministry, are addressed more especially to those who may have some dissatisfaction with religious things as they are, or who have allowed doubts and difficulties to arise in their belief. The Sermons, therefore, take a general survey of Rationalism, Romanism, and disunion, and, to use a homely expression homely expression, arrive at the conclusion that, with all its drawbacks and shortcomings, "there is no place like home."

Demosthenes; with English Notes. By the Rev. Arthur Holmes, M.A. Part I. De Corona. (Rivingtons.)—The "De Corona" is an oration on which a vast mass of criticism has accumulated. Eschines laid the charge and conducted the accusation, and Demosthenes, in his reply, was at his best. The oration is, in fact, perhaps the finest example of eloquence in existence, and, as a consequence, has received more attention than any other of ancient or modern times. Commentaries innumerable have been made on it, and the notes, explanatory and exegetical, would fill pages of this journal. Separate publications of the speech and separate translations abound, and the present editor had difficulty in selecting notes as well as arranging text. But he has done both satisfac-torily. He has given a summary of past criticism, as well as his own views, upon all points of interest, and cites the most noteworthy illustrations already made, as well as those he has himself collected. The text, admirably printed, is that of Dindorff's third edition, and the notes, collated with all these here. with all that has been already compiled, are the best, as well for the student and the scholar, we know. Of the whole series in the "Catena Classicorum," no volume has been more satisfactory than this.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN'S NEW FAIRY TALES. -There is an evergreen charm and vitality about Fairy Tales that belongs to no other kind of literature. They are welcome in every nursery; and where are the men or women so old, so world-worn, or so practical as to utterly ignore and forget all their early friends and favourites? At the approach of Christmas—time out of mind the true and legitimate season for story-tellingthe booksellers' windows are brightened with rows of dainty books in green and gold, with here and there a volume in warm crimson, like the berries on the shining holly. Be sure that among them the Fairy Tale has an honoured and conspicuous place. And just as in a family party the presence of an agreeable stranger or two is always welcome, so side by side with the immortal Cinderella, Prince Prettyman, the White Cat, and the Fairy Godmother, we are pleased to recognise a few new faces, and cordially intro-duce them to the rest of the visitors. First among these, politely chaperoned by Messrs. Mac-

Mounshine: a Selection of Fairy Stories by E. H. Knatchbull-Hugessen, M.P. for Sandwich. The stories are nine in number, and all possess the graceful and pleasant air that characterised the author's previous efforts in the same direction—
"Stories for My Children," and "Crackers for Christmas." Unlike some of the old fairy tales, they contain nothing repellent. It was the veteran artist George Cruikshank, we believe, who first set the fashion of re-writing "Jack the Giant Killer" according to modern notions, and giving a high moral tone to the adventures of Old Mother Hubbard and her famous Dog Toby. To him, too, the public are indebted for the notion of illustrating such stories in a thoroughly attractive and artistic manner. Much of Cruikshank's quaint and suggestive style has been caught by Mr. W. Brunton, to whom has been confided the task of translating the text of the author into pictures, which sparkle with talent and brim over with fun. The frontispiece, "Charlie among the Elves," is a true burlesque, and the illustration to "Mulligatawny"—which, but the man is the light the state of the same in the same in the same in the same is the same in by the way, is the old tale of the Fairy Godmother in a new dress-reminds us of the transformation scene in a pantomime, with beauty and absurdity equally effective. Except for a little over-elaboration, and a strong tendency to tack a lesson or "moral" to the tail of every story, "Moonshine" may be said to be a really excellent sample of modern fairy tales. The next visitor is

The Lost Child, by Henry Kingsley, with eight illustrations by L. Frölich, the artist whose "Little Darling" created a sensation some seasons ago. Though not properly a fairy tale, the "Lost Child" comes very well into the category, by reason of the graceful style in which it is written, and the exquisitely natural character of the engravings. The story relates to a little boy who lived in Australia, and wandered out into the bush in wondering search of kangaroos, snakes, and eagles; and was only found at last "dead and stiff, with one hand still grasping the flowers he had gathered on his last happy play-day." The story would have been more pleasing had the child been saved.

Little Lucy's Wonderful Globe is a charming story, told in her best manner, by Charlotte M. Yonge, the well-known authoress of the "Heir of Redclyffe," with a series of illustrations also from drawings by the versatile Frölich. This is a real fairy tale, though the fairy is simply a terestrial globe, which has been presented to little Lucy by a good-natured uncle. By its means—aided, of course, by a strong imagination—the little girl visits all manner of strange countries, and makes acquaintance with all sorts of remarkable people; gathering much curious knowledge in the course of her wanderings in dreamland, or fairyland, or both.

The Pleasant Tale of Puss and Robin, and their Friends, Kitty and Bob, is told by Louis Frölich in such a remarkable series of funnily-curious pictures that there was really no need of the accompanying rhymes furnished by Tom Hood. First, we find Kitty and Bob sitting on the grass under the garden wall discoursing seriously, while master Pussy is slyly making his way towards a robin perched on a post. Snatch! and there is a sudden fall of cat and bird, which greatly alarms the children, who determine to rescue the innocent thing from the claws of its feline captor. Away runs pussy, pursued by Kitty and Bob, who shout, and cry, and throw stones, and get very much excited; till at last they have the pleasure of seeing the bird fly into the window, while the cat dashes, frightened and furious, into the cellar. The children are delighted; but they presently think it would be great fun to catch the robin themselves. Such a search under the tables; such a confusion of chairs; such a clatter of voices; such a confusion of laughing and shouting there is before the poor little bird is caught and safely lodged in a cage, when it soon grows tame, and lives and sings happily ever after. These three volumes are thin, square quartos, in crimson, gold, and black, with a grotesque design of a baby blowing bubbles; the text and illustrations printed on fine stout paper: altogether a desirable little library for little people during the present-making season which is rapidly approaching. MESSRS. NELSON'S PUBLICATIONS.—Messrs. Nelson's books are always welcomed by young readers, for they are characterised by peculiar adaptability to their needs. The more so, as they contain the sort of reading parents may safely recommend and patronize, and which the youngsters themselves cannot but admire and prize. Among the volumes—bright with gold and colours, and all more or less illustrated—produced by this firm in anticipation of the holiday season, we may name the following :-The Household Robinson Crusoe, carefully re-printed from the original edition.—Of all the books for boys that ever were written, the "Life and Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe, of York, Mariner," stands alone unrivalled and unsurpassed. It has given birth to a whole library of voyages and travels; it has been imitated by all manner of authors; reprinted in all varieties of style by all manner of publishers; illustrated in many ways by many artists; and is still as popular as ever. The edition produced by Messrs. Nelson and Sons is in many respects commendable. The text of the original work has been followed in everything but the spelling; the title-pages have been reprinted, both in their phraseology and style of typography; the story itself is prefaced by a cleverly-written biography, from the pen of the editor, Mr. William Henry Davenport Adams. who appears, however, only by his initials; and followed by an appendix, in which is given the true history of Alexander Selkirk, whose solitary residence on the Island of Juan Fernandez is supposed to have formed the foundation of De Foe's The book is beautifully printed on fine paper, and handsomely bound in brown cloth, with gilt sides and edges. But—we regret that there should be any "but" in our notice—the text has been illustrated, somewhat profusely, by an artist who has either never read "Robinson Crusoe," or, having read it, has read it awry-Mr. Keeley Halswelle. A weaker or more inappropriate set of illustrations to a classic it has never been our misfortune to witness. Mr. Halswelle does not even make Crusoe like himself. In one place he is represented as a Scotch fisherman, in another as a comfortable English farmer. Sometimes his nose is aquiline and his cheeks covered with hair; at others he is clean shaven, with an imperial like a Parisian exquisite and a nose which is an unmistakable snub. We have a curious recollection, indeed, of having seen these precise faces in Chambers's "Family Shakespeare," which we believe had the honour of being illustrated by the We all know the conventional figure same artist. of Crusoe, as conceived by Defoe himself, and printed in the edition of 1719, and more or less adhered to by every other illustrator since. It is as familiar to boys as Seymour's happy idea of Mr. Pickwick is to all readers of Dickens. But Mr. Halswelle gives us quite another Crusoe, neither resembling the conventional type of the lonely mariner on the desert isle, nor in any way consistent with his character and appearance as described by De Foe. Conceive Crusoe, at the period of the story previous to the finding of Friday, reading the Bible in his solitary hut—"having opened the Book casually, the words that occurred to me were these: 'Call upon me in the day of me' "—and then try to picture him reclining in a fashionably-shaped, well-stuffed easy-chair, just new from the Curtain Road, attired in a flowing dressing gown, with one of Nelsons' rollermaps of Australia hanging conveniently upon the wall at his right hand; the floor covered with a Turkey carpet, and well-bound books lying on a table with turned legs, covered with a finelybordered cloth. Can anything be more absurd? And yet that is the precise picture presented to us by Mr. Halswelle at page 147 of this handsome and, but for his illustrations, commendable volume! This one woodcut is a type of the whole, which are incongruous, ill-drawn, and That this version of the immortal ridiculous. Crusoe suffers sadly at the hands of this incompetent illustrator is to be regretted; and, notwithstanding the expense, it behoves the publishers, if they determine to make the book thoroughly creditable, to abolish at least half of Mr. Halswelle's cuts, and in all future editions substitute for them the work of a more competent artist.

The Lady of Provence; or, Humbled and Healed, a tale of the First French Revolution, by A. L. O. E., who, in her most attractive manner, embodies a domestic story in the terrible events that make up the history of France during the Reign of Terror; a story in which moral teaching and historical fact are happily and artistically blended.

Stories from Jewish History, from the Babylonish Captivity to the Destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, -also by A.L.O.E., -compiled from the Scripture accounts, aided by Josephus's "History of the Jews," the writings of Prideaux, and a small volume on similar topics published some years ago in India. Like the other volumes in the series, it contains a large amount of real information, attractively embodied in language terse and plain, yet easy enough for any child to read and understand.

Grandpapa's Presents; or, Take Heed will surely Speed, is a tale for the young, by Mrs. George Cupples, the main object of which is to teach that good done in secret is certain to bring its own reward; prettily illustrated with a frontispiece and title-page in chromo-lithography and numerous well-executed wood engravings.

Matty's Hungry Missionary-Box, and the Message it Brought, a gracefully-written tale for young people, by the author of the "Copsiry Annals," illustrated in colours, and woodcast inserted in the text.

Hop: On; or, The House that Jack Built, a cleverly-constructed story for girls and boys; the house that the Jack of this story built being our that will endure much longer than that so indmately associated with the old fairy tale.

The six following tales are from the same facile

Brother Reginald's Golden Saret, a touching story of domestic country life, with a moral that all can understand and take to heart.

Martha's Home, and How the Sunshine came into it, which shows not only how a soft answer may turn away wrath, but how to make trouble 1

King Jack of Haylands, a story which show how a boy may not only be a good cricketer, good swimmer, a good scholar, and a "regular brick"—in fact, the king of the school,—but the by kindness, forbearance, and patience, he may achieve such higher distinctions as will become blessing to himself and others throughout his

Susy's Flowers, a tale for girls, the moral of which is to be found in the motto :-

" Blessed are the merciful; They strew the way with flowers, And scatter sunshine on the path That glistens wet with showers.

Little Aggie's Fresh Snowdrops, a pretty and affecting story, to which is added Little Violet, and a brightly-conceived sketch called The Blind Child. All the above are appropriately illustrated

The five next-mentioned books-pretty little six penny volumes in ornamental cloth, with coloured frontispieces and title-pages—are by the late Mix C. D. Bell, long known to young readers under the sobriquet of "Cousin Kate:"

The Story of the Shepherd Boy, a capital tale of village life; Trust in God, an example of the good that any little girl may accomplish by setting about her work in an earnest and cheefful spirit; Love thy Neighbour as Thyself, in which two poor Irish lads are taught a lesson of self-help and trustfulness; The Way to be Happy, telling how Willie, the gardener's son, was cured of pride and selfishness; and Wisdom's Ways, a narraine exhibiting the foolishness of anger and the blessing attendant upon a generous and confiding spini. All these stories, which are exceedingly well written, are printed in large type, easy and pleasure to the start to read.

sant to read. Last in the list of Messrs. Nelson's recent publications are several packets of Picture Cards Bible Animals, Birds of the Bible, &c. each packet containing a dozen beautifully printel chromo-lithographs, backed by explanatory texts very appropriate as Christmas gifts or Sunday school prizes for the younger classes.

MESSRS. GALL AND INGLIS'S PUBLICATIONS First in importance among the books for the season, issued by this firm is a New Edition Shakespeare, with a brief biography and glossarial notes, by Robert Inglis. These notes are conveniently reliable to the state of the s veniently placed at the foot of each page, the text being neatly printed in a very legible non-pareil type, and illustrated with engraving pareil type, and illustrated with customers on steel. The editor has wisely refrained from those he adopting many new readings, though those he has admitted are all in accordance with recent Handsomely bound discoveries and suggestions. in crimson cloth with gilt edges, this new Shakespeare seems well adapted for mechanics' libraries school prizes, and popular readings.

Boy Princes, by J. G. Edgar, appears in a new edition, with a frontispiece printed in colours, and eight full-page illustrations. Among the princes whose boy-life the author has related with a fluent pen are Arthur of Brittany, Gaston de Foix, Don Carlos, Henry Stuart, Louis de Valois, Charles de Valois, Ch Tower by order of Richard the Usurper.

Favourite Christian Biographics, also illustrated, consist of notices of Andrew Fuller, Thomas Arnold, Henry Havelock, Hedley Vicars, Robert Hall, Thomas Chalmers, Patrick Fraser Tytler, and others, from the story of whose lives boys may learn lessons of endurance, perseverance, and piety.

> A Pleasant Life, by Mary Howitt, is a delightful story or rather, collection of stories, the aim of which is to show that in the quiet atmosphere of home there may exist real heroism and true piety. Written in that charmingly easy style for which Mrs. Howitt has earned a deservedly high reputation, "A Pleasant Life" seems well reputation, adapted for the reading and delectation of inquiring girls.

> To their new Nursery Toy Books—the good old stories of our youth, in large type, with wonderful pictures in bright colours—Messrs. Gall and Inglis have added The Children in the Wood and Tom Thumb.

> RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS. -British Heroes and Worthies; with Portraits.
> (Religious Tract Society.)—The late Earl Derby suggested that a "National Portrait Exhibition, chronologically arranged, might not only possess great historical interest, but also serve to illustrate the progress and condition of British art at various periods. The result of the suggestion was the formation of the first Exhibition of Portraits at South Kensington in 1866. They consisted South Kensington in 1866. They consisted principally of pictures of a date not later than the end of the reign of the second James. Of those portraits few had been engraved, and many were comparatively unfamiliar to the general public. From the heroes and worthies there represented on canvas a selection has been made for the purpose of this volume, a substantial and elegant quarto in blue and gold. Twenty portraits have been excellently engraved, some for the first time. Among them we find those of Wycliffe, Latimer, Knox, Fox, Milton, Marvell, Pyne, Baxter, Wren, Sir Philip Sydney, Lady Jane Grey, and other less-known personages; the portraits ac-companied by brief but sufficient memoirs from the pens of Dr. Stoughton, the Rev. R. Demans, and the Editor of the Leisure Hour. The notices of John Pyne, Andrew Marvell, and Jeremy Taylor, may be mentioned as particularly good; though all the memoirs are well and gracefully written, and not a few exhibit signs of more than ordinary care and research.

Sketches and Stories of a Life in Italy have been written by an Italian Countess, who, for mere pastime's sake, kept a diary, in which she noted down whatever of curious legends and national customs came under her notice during a residence of many years in various parts of the historical peninsula. These traits and stories have now been gathered together, prepared for the press, and illustrated, and the result is an exceedingly interesting Christmas book.

Readings for Winter Gatherings, Temperance, and Mothers' Meetings, &c., issued in a second series, are tastefully selected by Mr. James Fleming, who has been cordially assisted in his task by several writers of reputation.

The People's Almanack, sixteen imperial 8vo pages, with illustrations, for one penny; an illustrated Penny Sheet Almanack; the Religious Tract Society's Penny Almanack; and the Pocket Book Almanack, also one penny.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL Union.-From the books recently published by the society-all printed and otherwise produced in good style, with suitable illustrations—we may mention the following :-

Songs of Gladness .- A selection of songs and hymns appropriate for schools and families, with the tunes printed in new music-type of the old notation. Many of the songs are original, and much of the music has been composed or adapted by Mr. C. Darnton, organist of Park Chapel, Camden Town.

Percy Raydon; or, Self-Conquest.-A tale for girls and boys, prettily written by Emma Leslie, who has already made her mark in literature by "Harry Lawley," and several other successful stories.

Miss Herbert's Keys. - A story intended to show that true honesty does not mean the mere keeping the hands from picking and stealing, but that it also includes integrity of purpose, truthfulness, and faithfulness in little things; well written by Mrs. II. B. Paull, author of "Breaking the Rules," and other tales for young people.

The Child's Own Magazine.—A neat little volume, containing tales, poems, and moral lessons, with illustrations, and several pieces of music prettily arranged for juvenile performers.

The Sunday-School Teacher's Hymn-Book, newly prepared, with several original pieces adapted for various occasions, neatly printed, and bound in limp cloth.

The Sunday-School Teacher's Diary for 1872, with Almanack, Class Register, List of Scripture Lessons, and Texts for every day in the year at the head of the diary pages, of good ruled paper; the whole enclosed in a neat cloth wrapper.

The Sunday-School Teacher's Diary and Pocket-Book for 1872; with Scripture lessons for every Sunday; ruled paper, and a large amount of religious information. The Class Register, 1872. Notes of Scripture Lessons, and several little pointedly-written New Year's Addresses: The Starting Point - Concentration - The Accepted Time and Home, Sweet Home.—A Penny Sheet Almanack, illustrated—The Child's Own Magazine-The Bible Treasury-The Bible Treasury and Youth's Own, and The Sunday School Teacher. Kind Words, an illustrated monthly, which must prove a very attractive visitor to the homes of teachers or children.

Homo versus Darwin. A Judicial Examination of Statements recently published by Mr. Darwin regarding "The Descent of Man." (Hamilton and Adams.)-Prefaced by a figure of an Ascidian and Adams.)—reflected by a figure of an Ascadan Tadpole, "that the reader may form some idea of man's very remote ancestors," this book takes up Mr. Darwin's theories, and opposes, if it does not confute them, paragraph by paragraph. The argument is carried on in the form of a judicial examination, in which Homo is plaintiff, Mr. Darwin defendant, and Lord C. (presumably Lord Cairns, "one of the ablest of English jurists") the arbitrator.

HACHETTE'S FRENCH SCHOOL Books. Messrs. Hachette are very fairly and properly making their way with a supply of good French books for schools, well edited, and well adapted to the wants of English scholars. The first volume of their French Reader is a selection from Edmond About, the editors being the French master of Christ's Hospital and the assistant master of Harrow. The advantage of books of this nature over the old classics is, that they contain specimens of the every-day spoken colloquial French similar to the English which we find in Dickens as distinguished from the English of Addison, Swift, or Milton.

PROSPECTS OF THE SEASON.

A DOZEN or more years ago THE BOOKSELLER commenced the practice of summing-up, or discounting, the Prospects of the Season-a practice which, judging from the manner in which it has been copied by contemporaries, must have been found useful. In those days five or six pages sufficed; now we fill thrice that quantity, and could easily fill more. Several times we have attempted to point out those books which might be considered of most interest, but as frequently have been compelled to give up the task in despair, and leave our readers to form their own unbiassed judgment.

NEW LIBRARY SERIES P11nch."

"A History of the Times we live in."

IN 1861, the Proprietors of "Punch" sought by means of a Re-Issue to introduce its Early Volumes to a newer and later generation (to whom they were comparatively unknown), and endeavoured, by means of a Moderate Price and form of publication, to place this Standard English "History"—in whose pages are depicted week by week the various Social and Political Changes of each succeeding period—on the shelves of Every Library.

The Introductory Notes or Keys prefixed to each Yearly Volume, explaining the political allusions of the time, proved to be most valuable to the reader, and the sale in this country and in the United States was very large. But the "Re-ISSUE" being limited to the first "twenty years," made the subsequent Volumes almost inaccessible as far as regards uniformity of binding and price, so that Complete Sets of "Punch" became apparently difficult to procure.

To meet this difficulty, and in compliance with numerous suggestions for an uniform issue, the Proprietors of "Punch" have resolved to publish a New Library Series, in alternate Monthly Volumes, each containing Two Years, with Notes, &c., handsomely bound, price One Guinea.

The First Volume of the "New Library Series," to be published on the 1st of November, will sell at 16s., and will contain the Volumes for 1841 and 1842 ("Punch" having been commenced in July, 1841.) The price of the subsequent Volumes will be 21s. each.

"Most of the comedies have the good fortune to please, and though it be confessed that she has borrowed very much, not only from her own countrymen, but likewise from the French poets, yet it may be said in her behalf that she has often been forced to it through haste, and has borrowed from other stores rather of choice than for want of wit of her own."—Langbaine's Dramatic Poets.

Such charming lines did never paper grace,

HE extreme rarity of this work has led to the present undertaking, as a means of bringing these most interesting and coveted volumes within the reach of the curious and the antiquarian. The demand for them is so much greater than the supply that copies when sold by public auction realize from 10 to 12 guineas.

A few Copies remaining can be had at Also a very few on Large Paper, to range with Bishop Percy's Ballads, at "This reprint appears to have been executed with great care, and will supply, at a far less expense, the place of the original in a very satisfactory manner. As far as we have examined it, it can hardly be said to have undergone any further editing than that required to insure a correct copy, which was what was chiefly wanted. It contains upwards of 150 of the best and most valuable of our old Ballads, and is certainly a boon for which all our students of the old national literature of England ought to be thankful to its publisher, Mr. Pearson."—Atheneum, Sept. 23, 1871.

results of this demand is the trade of supplying books ready bound to the retail bookseller. parently, this must be a large one. of Mr. Ramage, of Well-street, Jermyn Street, shows nearly a hundred different books, which it seems that he purchases in large numbers at a reduction upon the wholesale prices, binds also in quantities, and then offers to the trade upon such terms that they may compete with any of the London houses, and yet get a good profit upon the sale. Generally speaking, the bindings we have seen of Mr. Ramage's are such that not many London binders can do, both forwarding and finishing being of the very best description.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT. - A Correspondent in the States writes:--" The Americans don't like to be called such hard names as thieves and pirates, for taking what even in England is only property created by statute law. I have heard more than one publisher speak indignantly of the use of such epithets, and it would be a good step towards fixing up the difficulty, which I don't believe ever will be done, to treat it as any other question on which the opinion of both parties is entitled to respect. It is true, as Mr. Appleton said in his letter to the Times, that most publishers here are in favour of an International Copyright Treaty, because it would very much reduce the risk on reprints; but outside those interested in the trade, or authors, I do not think there is any inclination for a treaty which would tend to raise the price of books. It is felt that the treaty is really a question for the people at large, not for a small number of authors and publishers to settle. It is quite wrong for English authors and publishers to assume that no objections exist, and that it is simply an apathetic indifference to the demands of justice that allows the wholesale reprinting of foreign authors. The Americans have as keen a sense of justice as any people in the world, and it is safe to say that a small body of their number would never have been permitted to go on doing injustice if the popular opinion had been that what was done was an One of the arguments is that even in England copyright is not real property, and that the very nature of copyright law in England presupposes a doubt as to its being property at all. You can prosecute at common law for the theft of a book, but can only sue in equity for an infringe-ment of copyright. Therefore, the Americans say, why should we go to the trouble and expense of putting our Government machinery to work to create property over which we shall have no control, and from which we shall have no more benefit than at present? The cry is, let every author be content with the profit he can make in his own country, nor expect to derive benefit from laws towards which he contributes no sup-' [From an American point of view, these opinions appear sound, and we think it will take a good deal to convince Americans that they should pay three guineas for a copyright set of Tennyson's Poems when they can get a complete edition for fifty cents.]

SCIENTIFIC TOYS. - Messrs. Dean and Son have produced two most ingenious and interesting opcal toys, the invention of the Rev. Richard A kington-A Self-Winding Prismatic Top, which consists of a metal disc, capable of producing by means of coloured circles, ribbons, &c., an inhor: variety of curious circular forms of many into beautifully blending one into the other; and the Metabolasscope (from metabolas, changes, and hips I see). A series of large cardboard discs, pictor with holes and slots, fitted with transpared coloured gelatine, are made to rapidly revolues front of a lighted lamp or gas globe, when 2 most curious and remarkable kaleidoscopic effect are produced, similar to, but much more rane than, those familiarly known as Chinese Fireworks In both toys the effects are due to the statist fact that the mental impression of objects sea by the eye remains on the retina for an apprecial space of time after the objects themselves here been removed from the sight. The top, ben; self-winding, gives it a superiority over other to of this kind; while the small cost of both tox and their capacity for amusing a large number persons for a considerable time, are no small ? commendations.

DE LA RUE'S DIARIES. - Other diaries may be good, but these are the best, whether we resard the contents, the paper and print, or the same general turn-out. The literary part, edited by Mr. Godward, of the Nautical Almanack office, is well arranged, but rather scant in quantity. The printing in blue ink has a pleasing effect, and the paper is good. The specimens which have come to hand are :-

The Desk Diary, post 8vo, with a week to each opening; the diary portion printed in red.

minoreme The Indelible Diary for gentlemen, bound in Russia, lined with green, leather. A very recommendable present. (The number for ordering by ir. 182212 is 1338.)

The Indelible Diary for ladies, bound in crim-4.2 ser son morocco, with gilt bands and gilt snap-lock, had and lined with satin.

Next we have two oblong memorandum books, made of the same indelible metallic paper, one in Russia leather, with an internal economy of tuck on one side and flap on the other, lined with pale calf; too good for commercial purposes, but suitable for gentlemen, officers, and members of the Upper House. The other specimen is of the same shape, but smaller; for the use of ladies or daintily-gloved gentlemen. The edges are protected by massive gilt metal mountings.

Allen's Almanacks and Pocket Books.

Great Midland, a Cyclopædia of useful informa tion. The Wonderful, an excellent pennyworth of the marvellous, the curious, and the extraordinary, historical, biographical, social, meteorological, mechanical and natural, altogether a very meritorious compilation. The Commercial Pocket Book, with tuck; the Victoria Almanack, a child's pocket book, and the Princess Royal's Almanack; all put together by a cunning crastsman.

The Preshyterian is the title of a new "Magazine for the Church and Family, conducted by Members of the Free Church of Scotland," published by Mr. John Maclaren, of Edinburgh. The Garden is the appropriate title of a new illustrated weekly journal of horticulture, edited by Mr. William Robinson, F.L.S., author of "Alpine Flowers for English Gardens," &c., assisted by well-known writers in the several departments. The first number contains some suggestive articles notably one on Garden Design, by Mr. Noel Humphreys.

Plansure: A Holiday Book of Prose and Verse. (Henry S. King & Co.)—The contributions to "Pleasure" form a constellation of talent, and are from the pens (amongst others) of Mr. Algernon Swinburne, Mr. Hain Friswell, Miss Amelia Edwards, the Hon. Mrs. Norton, and Holme Lee. "The New Pass," by Miss Edwards, will be read with deep interest; and "A Rewill be read with deep interest, and gret "contains those pensive touches with which Man Norton's name is associated. The gem Mrs. Norton's name is associated. of the work, however, is Mr. Swinburne's new poem, "Tristram and Tseult," than which he has written nothing grander in conception, or more perfect in execution. The theme is the power of the master passion, Love-

"Love, that is first and last of all things made;
The light that, moving, has man's life for shade;
The spirit that, for temporal veil, has on
The souls of all men woven in unison."

The Rev. Canon Kingsley writes on "The The Kev. Canon Kingsoy white Critical Spirit," with a calmness of purpose which betokens long and anxious training. "Over the betokens long and anxious training. greater part of the so-called civilized world is spreading a deep distrust, a deep irreverence of every man towards his neighbour. Cloaked in the guise of virtue and of dignity, detraction simpers as impartiality base, envy struts as noble independence, and a practical unbelief in every man whom you do see atones for itself by a theoretic belief in an ideal human nature which you do not see." This passage will show the tenour of the essay. We must credit the Editor for the careful selection of authors and papers. The volume is one of the most agreeable the season has produced.

THE LADY SCOTT SWINDLE. -The following statement respecting the prosecution of "Vis-count de Montgomery" has been circulated for the purpose of raising a fund to reimburse Mr. Gould, through whose untiring exertions the perpetrators of the swindle were brought to justice :James Hitchman, alias Sir James Hitchman, Bart., alias Viscount de Montgomery, alias Vernon de Montgomery, alias Percy Montgomery, alias Miss Alexander, alias Abbott and Co., alias Longman, alias Arthur Hamilton, alias Hamilton & Co., and Arthur Richard Stenson, also known as alias Hamilton, were recently charged at Bow Street with obtaining and conspiring to obtain money under salse pretences from Mr. Chas. Pope Chapple, Bookseller, of Ilminster, and other booksellers, by circulating an order, purporting to have been written by one "Lady Scott," throughout the kingdom, and thus a very large number of book-sellers of England and Wales simultaneously ordered copies from their London agents. Various stratagems were resorted to by the prisoners to obtain delay, and it was, consequently, only after repeated adjournments at the Bow Street Police Court and dilatory applications before the Superior Judges in Chambers, that they were ultimately brought to trial at the Clerkenwell Sessions, before Mr. Serjeant Cox, the Deputy Assistant-Judge, on the 15th September last, when, after three days' investigation, and the whole of the facts of the case having been laid before the jury, the prisoners were convicted—one on both charges, and both upon the charge of conspiring to obtain money under salse pretences.

Although the jury were unanimous in their ver-dict as to the guilt of the prisoners, the learned judge, upon objections raised by the prisoners' counsel, reserved certain points for the opinion of the Court for the consideration of Crown Cases The case, as stated by Mr. Serjeant Cox, came on for argument on the 11th day of November, before the Lord Chief Raron, Fitzroy Kelly, the Honourable Justices By Lush and Hannan, and Baron Pigott, which case was, however, sent back by their Lordships' direction to be restated. Again, on the 18th day of November, the arguments of the prisoners' counsel were resumed on the case as restated, but the judges, without calling on Mr. Besley and Mr. A. B. Kelly, the counsel for the prosecution, to reply, unanimously affirmed the conviction against both prisoners. On the 23rd November the prisoners were brought up to receive sentence, when Mr. Serjeant Cox, after severe comments on the prisoners' past career, and their having managed to evade the law up to the present time, expressed himself that he had never had any doubt as to their moral guilt, and sentenced both prisoners to 12 months' imprisonment with hard labour, "to commence as of to-day;" and added that, but for the imprisonment they had already undergone, the sentence would have been 18 months.

This result, it is believed, has put an end to the career of "Viscount de Montgomery," and has also relieved the sphere of literature from a system of fraud which had been pursued, in one form and another, by him, as a notorious swindler and begging-letter impostor, for nearly twenty years, and which has been publicly exposed in a pamphlet, entitled "One Thousand Pounds Reward," by Mr. W. R. Evans, containing details of a series of complicated swindles; also by the "Saturday Review," of February 23rd, 1863; "Morning Advertiser," April 19th, 1871; "The Times," May 23rd, 1871; the "Standard" and "Echo," of the following date; the "Mendicity Society's Annual Reports," and "The Bookseller," of June, July and August; and other newspapers, &c.

But the end has not been obtained without an expenditure of time, labour, and anxiety on the part of Mr. Abraham Gould, of 470, Street, W.C., which few men would have incurred over a matter in which they had no personal interest, but in which they had been identified, in the first place, almost accidentally. This, how-ever, is not all. Mr. Gould has, in addition to these personal sacrifices, incurred a very heavy liability to his solicitors (Messrs. Merriman, Powell, and Co., 28, Queen Street, E.C.) for the prosecution, which has been rendered as expensive as possible by the ingenious though futile tactics of the prisoners. A number of gentlemen and firms connected with the literary and other trades, feeling themselves interested in this matter, and appreciating the public spirit of Mr. Gould, have voluntarily come forward to assist in defraying this liability, and further co-operation and assistance is invited in order that the remaining liability of Mr. Gould may be satisfied, and that he may not have in addition to his other personal losses, to put his hand in his pocket for any further moneys. The total amount of the law expenses will be about

PROPHETIC ALMANACKS. To the Editor of "THE BOOKSELLER"

SIR,-I observe with much pleasure that our ancient friend, Francis Moore, Physician and Almanack-Maker, has this year discontinual the Hieroglyphic. I hope every honest bookseller throughout the kingdom will do everything in his power to hinder the sale of all such rubbish is Zadkiel's Prophetic Almanack, Orion's Calenda, Fortune-tellers, Dream-books, &c. If pork want them, let there be at least on our part some difficulty about supplying them. What any or gets out of a trade of that sort is surely not wart consideration, and I fear that we, as booksellers have a weight on our consciences on that some I know only one respectable publishing house no that has the audacity to show a Dream-book or Fortune-teller in their samples. If they don't take this hint kindly, I'll gibbet them before long. am, sir, your most obedient servant,

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

Annales Monasterii S. Albana, a Johanne Amundesham, Monacho, ut videtur Conscripti (A.D. 1421-40). Quibus prafizitur Chronicon rerum gestarum in Monasterio (A.D. 1422-31) a quodam auctore ignoto compilatum. Edited by H. T. Riley, M. A. Vol. II. (London: Longman & Co., and Trübner and Co.)—Mr. Riley is doing much to restore St. Alban's Abbey. St. Alban's forms the best example we have of a building in which the several styles of architecture occur. There the the several styles of architecture occur. transitional changes are clearly marked, and a diligent and competent reader may see, interpreted in stone, the lineaments of successive ages. The restoration which Mr. Riley has effected is, however, far more useful in bringing before the mind's eye of our generation the sort of life lived in the Hertfordshire Abbey during a portion of the middle ages than any architectural work that c in be performed. In the chronicles of the monastery, which, under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, he has given to the world, we have a picture, drawn by contemporary hands, of a set of characters and a series of events which are at once accurate and deeply interesting. present volume is not, it must be confessed, so full as its predecessor of what an ordinary English reader prefers. We have not here painstaking accounts of the pomps and ceremonials of the highest in the land. In the former volume we keep company with Abbot Whethamstede in his relations with the outer world. Throngs of noblemen and great men are our associates. introduced to royal flesh and blood, and mix in the turmoils and political schemes of the times. In these annals now presented to us we are introduced to Whethamstede during the twenty years of his first rule. We travel with him across the continent, and then return and see him concerned In the routine duties of Abbotial life. Chosen in convocation as one of the English prelates to attend at the Council of Pavia, held in 1423, for the suppression of heresies, the Abbot, after making arrangements for the rule of the monastery during his absence, set out for London. having received the letters appointing him proctor at the ensuing Council, he reached Dover and took ship late at night for Calais. The sea, we must suppose, was not propitious; for, in an account he wrote of this, his first sea-experience, we read that his mind was in a state of consternation as the storm raged and the rigging snapt asunder, and, "with shame be it spoken, just like the rest in all respects, we did suffer the sufferings of the sea." Yes, the sea was no respector of persons, and the Abbot, like the rest of the passengers, experienced the terrors and the nausea of the voyage. But such an incident is soon forgotten. He was bound for Mayence, and, mounting horse, he scampered rapidly through Picardy, Flanders, and Brabant. At Mayence the Cardinal Piacenza, then legate a latere, invited our Englishman to dinner; but there was no ros bif, and the Abbot sickened after he had eaten the strange dishes placed before him. It was a fortnight before he recovered from the effects of the unlucky dinner, and then, remounting, resuming his journey through Worms, Spires, Ulm, Kempten, resuming his he passed over Mont S. Nicholas, and by way of Tremin on the Adige, Trent, Verona, and Cremona, at length reached Pavia. The Council was in session; but that dire scourge of the middle ages, the plague, was breaking out, and it was formally transferred to Sienna in June, 1423. The Abbot and his retinue, with a safe conduct from the Duke of Milan, sets out for Sienna, where, after more than one curious adventure, he arrives to find the Bishop of Lincoln, in a separate sitting of the English envoys, has been renewing the attack, begun at Pavia, upon the exempt abbeys, of which St. Alban's was one. Acting upon a friendly hint from the Bishops of Carlisle and Rochester, our Abbot, "as well for the health of his soul as with the view of anticipating his adversary of Lincoln," resolved to proceed to Rome, where at that time Martin V. was chief Pontiff. Then again illness intervenes. So sad is his condition that he receives plenary indulgence from the Pope, and prepares to die. But he unexpectedly recovers, and after two more interviews with the Pope, returns to Sienna and is reconciled with his foe the Bishop of Lincoln. His health, however, made it necessary for him to return to England; and, after eleven months' absence, he reached St. Alban's on the 25th of February, 1424. Thenceforward we find Whethamstede engaged in the regular duties of Abbotial life. The text, and-for those who will be too much occupied for that-Mr. Riley's Introduction will enable all readers to form a tolerably accurate notion of a monk's life in the earlier half of the fifteenth The contest between the abbey and other religious houses; the visitations of cells; the shortcomings of claustral life; the details of monastic rule; the nature of the amusements allowed, and the character of the plays acted; the sentences of penance pronounced; the suits at law undertaken; the presents interchanged between church dignitaries; the acquisitions made by an abbey, and the processes by which they were maintained—are here all recorded, so that of the period of ecclesiastical history over which the work extends we have a clear and continuous account.

The annals abound with specimens of Whethamstede's composition in verse and prose, but he excelled in neither form. His epistles, as Mr. Riley indicates, are "in bad taste, inflated, involved, and verbose." Why, then, with these manifest defects, they should have credit for being written in good grammar and showing an acquaintance with some of the Latin classics we fail to perceive. The "extensive learning" to which Mr. Riley refers as exhibited in the "Granarium," the four parts of which contain nothing but what might have been written by any monk in the abbey, are no evidence that the writer was a man of singular ability.

The First English Conquest of Canada; with some Account of the Earliest Settlements in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, By Henry Kirke, M.A. (Bemrose and Sons). - From the first discovery of the Americas there seems to have been a continual struggle for their possession and subjugation among the nations of Europe. Not the least interesting of the episodes connected with the colonization of North America are those belonging to Canada. From the papers in the Record Office, lately opened to the researches of literary men, many interesting and valuable facts concerning the settlement of Canada, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland, especially those connected with Acadia—the scene of Longfellow's well-known poem, "Evangeline"—during the years 1621 to 1660, have been brought In re-opening this page of English histo light. tory, Mr. Kirke, with an amount of industry meriting all praise, has produced a connected account of the patent grants and rights given by Charles the First to the early adventurers in N In the State Paper Office exists a series of documents relating to these colonies, which, having been first collated by Mr. Sainsbury, have again been examined, classified, and observes, "so great are the changes resulting from such a wholesale discovery of documents, that our belief in the main facts of English History, such as were taught in our childhood, is in danger of being entirely subverted; and when we leave the beaten track, and attempt, like Macaulay and Froude, to analyse the actions and motives of our leading history-makers, we are overwhelmed by the mass of evidence now offered." Among the first colonists of Canada was Sir David Kirke, an ancestor of the compiler, who held Newfoundland for King Charles, and offered it to him as an asylum when England was no longer safe to remain in. But the death of the king rendered vain the aid proffered by Kirke, who was afterwards brought to England, examined by the Council, and allowed to return to Newfoundland, where, after a series of disappointments, reverses, and misfortunes, he died, probably in the winter of 1655-6, leaving behind him three sons, who were eventually deprived of their proprietary rights by the parliament of the second Charles, when, towards the ment of the second Charles, when, towards the close of the 17th century, this island became a settled colony of the British Empire. In a like satisfactory manner the history of Nova Scotia is traced, from the treaty of St. Germains to its cession to France in 1667; from which period the story of its repossession by England, and its final absorption into the Canadian Dominion, are well absorption into the Canadian Dominion, are well known. In an appendix are printed several of the documents referred to in the text of this interesting volume.

Glasgow: J. Tweed.)—Exhaustive in its treatment, and satisfactorily minute in its account of the several events and circumstances belonging to its past and present history, this book fills a worthy place in the literature of topography. As in the former divisions, the buildings and places described are illustrated by woodcuts and steel described are illustrated by woodcuts and steel plates, the present being prefaced by a "Plan of Part of ye City of Glasgow and Course of the Burn Molendinar leading to the saw mill erected by William Fleming Mercht. in Glasgow in 1750 & 1751 & set agoeing in 1752 Demolished by the Magistrates of Glasgow on the 23 June 1764 for which he then commenced a process against the said Magistrates of a final Judgement given on the 9 July 1768 the of a final Judgement given on the 9 July 1768 the Magistrates paid the pursuer on the 18 Nov. following £610 1s. 1d. sterling and were also oblige! to relieve him of the expence of extracting the decreet." This curious old plan was presented to the publisher by Mr. J. G. Fleming, M. D., President of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons in Glasgow, grandson of the pursuer in the well-known "Saw-mill Case," an account of which is given in this work. It is especially interesting as showing the extent of the city a hundred years ago, and, by comparison with recent maps, the ago, and, by comparison with the have been enlargements and improvements that have been since effected. When completed, this History of Glasgow will be certainly an important and valu-Sketches, Personal and Political, in the House of ommons. By a Silent Member. Vol. II. (Pro-Commons. vost.)—Whether the "Silent Member" be a real vost.)—whether the observer from the Reporters' Gallery, a clever journalist, or only a shrewd outsider, certain it is that he thinks deeply, criticises freely and speaks plainly—too plainly perhaps. freely, and speaks plainly—too plainly, perhaps, readers.

Mr. Pisistratus Brown, M.P., in the He lands. (Macmillan.)-Reprinted, with additional from the Daily News, these sketches contains that is worthy of preservation. The changes the simple-minded, bumptious, fussy, and not educated legislator is not given in full, is allowed to peep out-in stray bits of human satire-of eloquent descriptions of Highland and mountains, at dinner-tables and social gaix ings, shooting parties, and deer stalkings most natural and unobtrusive manner. Some the sayings and doings of the member for Board in-the-Marsh are exquisitely funny, as when beg a half-sovereign to a shoeless little Celic a seller, with the words, "You are too pretty and girl to have no shoes and stockings, so take its to your mother, and tell her to buy you some When told that he "was corrupting a hardy in independent population," he was forced to the offered nuts, and, not knowing what to do rich them, bethought him of his hat. And so it is that till they were out of sight of that little its ture walked with a hatful of green nuts a hand, while an almost vertical sun was powardown its fiercest rays on his bald head. The capital sketches are prefaced by a woodcut, sket ing the M.P. in a railway carriage, with a guard looking and inquiring, "Is there a bid macintosh here?" "No," replies a ways artist, "we are a' red MacGregors!"

Etymological and Pronouncing Dictionary of English Language. For Use in Schools and Co. leges, and as a Book of General Reference in the Rev. James Stormouth. The Promucian carefully Revised by the Rev. P. H. Phelp, M.

(Blackwood.) A Dictionary of English. By Harsleigh Way wood, M.A. Second Edition. With an troduction on the Formation of Language (Trübner)—A full and complete pronounce tymological and explanatory dictionary of its English language, as this professes to be, as within the limits occupied by it, would be acceptable addition to lexicology. Without committing ourselves by saying that the result of Mr. Stormouth's labour is altogether perfect, is right to stote the right to state that in several important particular it fulfils the required conditions. Designed is schools and colleges as well as for general us, work has the high merit of being clearly arranged and the way in which the dictionary words are printed, a bold black type being used, added siderably to facility of reference. In the graph, of the words, too, the author has judicion treated his subject: those derived from the series leading root are grouped under a leading work Care, however, has been taken not to group to such an extent as to create difficulty in consulting The alphabetical order is not violent or uselessly disturbed, and the important additions in the important additions in the important additions in the important additional in the important additions in the important additional in the im tage is gained of finding the words most near allied presented to the eye in a bold type, and the specific pot scottered "not scattered over several pages merely becars their terminal letters are different." But it is respect of pronunciation, (lymology, and meaning of words that a dictionary is to be tested; and herein, too, the result of our examination is substantiation. The scheme of cound-symbols prefact to the volume is installed in and the author and to the volume is intelligible, and the author and his colleboarts his collaborator in this department are, we think right in their performance as well as in their method. The meanings are avowedly those usually given; but they have been simplified is much as possible and approximate use that is much as possible, and sometimes we see that if the process of curtailment clearness has been safe As a rule, however, the definitions are sufficiently explicit and various. For the ey logy the author has resorted to "the best and a streliable authorities," Wedgwood, Latham, Max Müller having been consulted as to the and as derived from the non-classical guages. In this department we observe those ficiencies which are to be detected, in a more or s degree, in all such works as that before us. e habit of lexicographers upon finding two ords similar in sound and formation to derive one the other, when in reality both have some mmon origin, is not departed from by Mr. Besides, in defining words clearly ant derived from the sources usually assigned to em, he slavishly follows his predecessors without tempting to furnish his own opinion. nfessing that it must not be supposed all the ot-words given really indicate the ultimate urces of the English words, he himself makes no tempt to point out the ultimate sources. e philosophy of language he is clearly incompe-nt to deal. He has no notion that better, the regular comparative of "good," is in any way lated to bad, or that blanch and black are allied. etymology his ways are the ways of other ctionary makers. He must have credit for elaborating a mass of matter from a variety of urces," and placing the result clearly before the udent; but he has exhibited no originality in onception or in treatment.

Mr. Wedgwood's volume is of a different nare. The first edition was well received by the ublic; in a certain way the work was tentative. he encouragement it received has, however, had no effect of inciting the author thoroughly to relies and correct the work as it then appeared; nd now we have the further result of additional abour and thought. The etymology, which has seen extended to the classical roots of the lanuage, has been materially altered. The additional matter now forms one of the most attractive eatures of the new publication, and the alterations hat have been made give it a wider value. Mr. Wedgwood, like Mr. Stormouth, has often faretched derivations, which on closer examination would appear untenable; but he is always schoarly, and mostly philosophical in his treatment.

Half a Dozen Daughters. By J. Masterman. Two vols. (Henry S. King and Co.)—Without 1 murder, a burglary, a suicide, or even an aggravated case of bigamy, this novel possesses many egitimate attractions. In the first place, it is well and evenly written; in the next, there is a com-nendable absence of sensation and startling effect; nd in the third, and most important, it is true to fe, and, therefore, interesting and pleasant to ad. A novel with three such recommendations nould certainly be popular; and when we add nat its interest depends rather upon a gradual volution of character than upon intricacy of plot, e shall have said enough to indicate the class of tion to which it properly belongs. Of plot, ined, there is little to describe; for without we ent to great length, it would be impossible to nvey an adequate notion of the varying emotions akened in the hearts of these six fair daughters d no son, as they are severally courted, wooed, 1 married, and ever and again subjected to the ernate joys and sorrows of every-day life; but en we come to think that the surname of these ovely and accomplished girls "was "Shrugg," are not surprised to find them somewhat ious to change it. The contrast between the y poverty and the final opulence of the family elicately handled; and though the girls and r lovers naturally stand in the front of the pic-, their parents are by no means kept too much ie background, but, as occasion serves, come forward and exhibit many natural traits of character. "Half a Dozen Daughters" will be one of the successes of the season.

Isoult Barry of Wynscote: Her Diurnal Book. A Tale of Tudor Times. By Emily Sarah Holt, Author of "Mistress Margery," &c. (John F. Shaw) Sarah Was Bishood Bathbard B Shaw.)—Some years ago Mrs. Richard Rathbone, wife of the well-known Liverpool merchant, wrote a charming volume, often since reprinted, under the title of "Lady Willoughby's Diary," followed or preceded, we do not remember which, by the "Mary Powell, her Life and Letters," by a then unknown authoress. The example set by Mrs. Rathbone and Miss Manning, of producing a novel under the form of a diary kept by a lady of fashion in the good old times, has been since fol-lowed by several writers, and by none more successfully than by Miss Holt, who in this, her latest work, reproduces pictures of the domestic life of the Tudor age with much facility and apparent fidelity: numerous authorities having been consulted in the State Paper Office and in the British Museum Library, in order to ensure accuracy and historical likeness; and Mrs. Everett Green's "Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies" having been diligently studied, but by no means copied or unfairly employed. Of course a love-story is embodied in "Isoult's Diary" and a very pretty and delicate story it is; but so many and so diverse are the incidents that the attempt to detail the plot would not only occupy too much space, but would certainly destroy the pleasure of the

Donnington Castle: a Royalist Story. In Fourteen Staves. With Notes. By Colonel Colomb. (Longmans.)—Supposed to have been narrated at a great convivial meeting in Kent, in 1648, the time the Kentish men rose for Charles the First, this poem tells of how it chanced that Sir John Boys, a faithful cavalier, became the defender of Donnington against the troops of the Parliament; and how his good service was rewarded by the King's presence at his wedding:

"Sir John he knelt to His Majesty there,
And he pressed his lady-love dear to his heart;
You may be sure that Elizabeth fair
Was sale from harm in His Majesty's care,
And from Boys she never again will part."

There is nothing in the poem, or its "Introductory Letter to some person unknown," to show that it is really a modern production; nor is the occasional employment of songs with music inconsistent with the period at which the events related are supposed to have taken place; so that altogether, "Donnington Castle" may be considered a very creditable rendering of an obsolcte style.

Furnorth. A Novel. By Theo. Kennedy. With an Illustration by the Writer. Second Edition. (Ulverston: D. Atkinson. London: Whittaker.)—In this compact duodecimo we have as much reading as is ordinarily contained in the regular three-volume novel, and that, too, of more than ordinary interest. The scene of the story is laid in that convenient locality, "the most picturesque corner of Blankshire;" the characters belonging to what may be called the upper middle classes—a baronet, a barrister, a doctor, and a beautiful girl taking part in an interesting and life-like domestic plot; and the machinery, whereby the incidents are dovetailed together, neither commonplace nor improbable. The main interest of the story centres in the heroine, Clara Sylvester, whose constancy and consistency in opposing and disappointing the hopes of her friends are very well conceived; while the efforts of the Browns and Joneses of the story to get a footing in good society are amusingly satirised

The Spiritual Letters of S. Francis de Sales. Translated. Fcap. (Rivingtons.)-Without going into the theology of the work, this is a difficult book to describe; and to discuss its theology is beyond our province. The author of the "De-vout Lips" was one of those eminently pious men who, like our own Bishop Wilson and John Keble, attracted a large number of followers, who hung upon his lips and sought his counsel and advice upon matters of spiritual interest. Thus a novice inquires whether she does right in encouraging excited feelings in order to prevent spiritual coldness. A priest, about to be consecrated bishop, inquires how he may best perform the functions of his office, and is advised to study certain religious books and to preach. An archbishop asks his advice about preaching; his advice is clear:-" Preach the Word. For this, Holy Scripture affords abundant material. Are we not to use the writings of the Saints and Doctors of the Church? you ask. Indeed, yes; but what are their writings save the exposition and setting forth of Holy Scripture? It is the breaking the loaf into pieces for distribution, as the cracking of the shell . . . So of the of the nut to obtain the fruit. lives of the Saints; what are these, save practical illustrations of the Gospel?" The letters are 149 in number, and the advice is as valuable now as when first given.

The Last Twelve Verses of the Gospel according to St. Mark. Vindicated against the recent Critical Objectors, and established. By John W. Burgon, B.D., Vicar of St. Mary-the-Virgin. 8vo. [J. Parker and Co.) - On the title-page is a motto which we commend to all authors and editors in general, and to all such loose writers as Mr. James Grant In a conversation with the late in particular. President of Magdalen College, Dr. Routh, the venerable doctor is reported to have said, "Did you say that you wished I would give you a few words of advice, sir? then let me recommend to you the practice of always verifying your references, sir!" Sound advice, which we believe Dr. Routh always carried out in his own publications. The last twelve verses of St. Mark's Gospel are an apparent addition made after the writer's decease, embodying the understood facts of our Lord's life after His resurrection. Nearly all recent critics of eminence have given them up as spurious, but all admit that the additions were made at an early period. Mr. Burgon's argument is that the verses in question are genuine, and to prove this he produces evidence of various kinds. The witnesses are the ancient copies still in existence; of some of these he gives photographed facsimiles. Next he brings forward a number of early writers, including some that are admitted to be apocryphal, but which are also very ancient; these altogether present a large amount of cumulative evidence which is deserving the attention of biblical students. This, in short, is a statement of the contents of the volume, which is creditable to the scholarship of Mr. Burgon, who has thus expended the time and leisure which his fellowship at Oriel permitted him to do, and in which he has set a good example to other fellows of colleges, too many of whom appear to think that nothing should be expected from them in return r their incomes. But we must take exception the tone of the dedication to our future Lord ucellor, Sir Roundell Palmer, it reminds us he existence of loaves and fishes; also to the ant manner which Mr. Burgon too frequently alges in when speaking of the labours of others 10 are at least his equals in point of scholarip. Notwithstanding these trifling drawbacks the volume is a valuable addition to our meagre stock of English criticism.

A Bible Dictionary, for the The Haydn Series. use of all Readers and Students of the Holy Scripture of the Old and New Testaments and of the Book of the Apocrypha. Edited by the Rev. Charles Boutell, M.A. 8vo. (Moxon and Co.)-We cannot speak very highly of this book. Not be there is any great fault to find with it, but the there appears to be too much of mere compilation with little brilliancy in the setting. In companing with the Dictionary of Dates, for instance, there's a want of the terse interesting matter to be found a that volume, indicating that the compiler or compilers had no special knowledge of their subject. and that the editor had failed to supply their war In future editions this may be supplied, and the the volume may in usefulness be worthy of the Haydn Library.

The Speaker's Commentary. Reviewed is Thomas Lumsden Strange, late a Judge of the (Triibner).-The effer High Court of Madras. of the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of Ladon, Ely, Chester, St. Davids, and Rath # Wells, assisted by many of their clergy, to uphal the authority of the Authorised Version agrees the attacks of Bishop Colenso and the ciples of free thought, are here reviewed criticised in a manner that is at least bold as straightforward; the author bringing to the sa port of Colenso many illustrations from India and Chinese mythology, and concluding his of servations thus :- "Not a word about the Hebre race, or its exodus, appears in the Egyptian annib. had those events really occurred, some notice of them must have appeared in the monument registries and well-kept records of Egypt. (* commentators show but too much consciouses that this should be so, and vainly struggle, it without an atom of success, to associate the 187 people together in their histories. Beyond the miraculous narratives, for which independe: proofs are requisite, we have not a single parties of the to-be expected information. The Henry say not one word of the Egyptians, and the Egyptians know nothing of the Hebrews Tu painful attempts the commentators make to entire an association of the sort required only serve show that none has existed. This was a saport which the Bible could assuredly have had, as-has it not." With the purely historical part of the argument the reviewer seems, naturally, mos home; but he does not hesitate to criticise the inspired volume, and to set up his "proofs are evidences" against the "proofs and evidence adduced by the authors of the "Explanatory and the control of the "Explanatory and the control of the "Explanatory and the control of the "Explanatory and the control of the "Explanatory and the control of the contr Critical Commentary," published by Mr. Merry, and commonly known as the "Speaker's (or mentary;" a work which, he tells us, is despet to correct and prevent the fatal liberties taken Bishop Colenso with the Pentateuch: "to bish us back to the good old ways, to sente re-doubt, and remove every scruple, and to girs ready answers wherewith to meet the adversion our reasons for the faith which, at all erer should be in us, if not actually so.

The remedy seems, indeed, very simple: it is only for our principal printers to agree among themselves to print the words in question in one uniform way; and authors, scholars, and the public would soon accustom themselves to write, read, and speak them in a uniform method. A quarter of a century's perseverance in one plan by the printers would accomplish a quiet spelling revolution.

MM. HACHETTE & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATION

Messrs. Hachette beg to call special attention to the following Works, which are now Ready.

ROME: Description et Souvenirs. Par FRANCISQUE WEY.

One large 4to Volume, with 346 Wood Engravings, after the Designs of some in the most Eminent Artists, of which the Publishers beg to quote the following names:

HENRI REGNAULT, A. VIOLLET, LEDUC, DE NEUVILLE, BAYARD, CATENACCI, &C.

Price 50s.; Splendidly Bound, with Original Design on Cover, 65s.

The Daily News, in its impression of the 20th of November, states as follows:—
"Foremost among the illustrated books now in our hands we place—both for the intersals subject and the admirable character of its engravings—a French work issued by Messrs. Hacheten Co., under the title of Rome: Description et Souvenirs, par Francis Wey. The volume is a large quand is illustrated by 346 engravings on wood, distinguished by remarkable excellence. The wait impartially divided between ancient and modern Rome. The Rome of the Cæsars, and the Roze the Popes—the Rome which is a solemn pageant of ruins, and the Rome which has St. Petrika centre, and the Vatican for its seat of priestly rule—are reproduced with obvious fidelity in the rewhich accompany the text. Naturally, the modern town receives the greatest share of attention; it the footsteps of the past are also followed. The singular double life of the city—a duality not a paralleled by any other place in the world—is thus brought out with the utmost force. We past the temples of Paganism to the fanes of Christianity—from the gods and semi-deities of the older ship to the saints of the newer faith. Buildings, superb or meretricious—street scenes, gadus statues, busts, pictures, the melancholy wrecks of time, and the evanescent life of to-day—all the things, which make up the many-sided, noble, vile, melancholy, magnificent, and under all its numes aspects attractive, idea of Rome, are represented in the engravings so liberally dispersed thos, and certain sense, Rome is still an Imperial city. A dream of ancient majesty yet hangs about palaces, its temples, and its ruins—about the mournful beauty of its surrounding scenery, and he paraller of its sky. Together with the illustrations we should mention the text, which worlding the reader through the wonders of which it has to treat."

THE CHRISTMAS BOOKSELLER.

THOUT any preconcerted plan, or intentional arrangement as to its contents, the CHRISTMAS BOOKSELLER yearly brings before its readers specimens of the Illustrated Books of the Season, produced by all the chief publishers. All who are interested in the progress or retrogression of the English School of Wood Engraving are thus enabled to judge of its condition. After an examination of the Number for the present year, the conclusion at which most persons will arrive is, that while a very high position has been gained by some artists, the majority prefer the ordinary class of work, for which there is a larger demand, and upon which they may employ inferior labour. Some of the illustrations are as good as any that have ever been engraved; and it is satisfactory to observe that the hard, scratchy style indulged in for some time, by many of our leading designers and engravers, has nearly disappeared.

The Bookbinders' Art has made greater progress during the past twenty years than any other mechanical art connected with literature, and it is not too much to say that the success of many modern books is as much due to their exterior appearance as to their literary merit. The sombre and unadorned have almost disappearered, and even the Oxford University Press, which for so many years persisted in issuing its publications in "quires," now publishes them in cloth, with gilt ornamentation.

In Printing there is little to remark. Rapidity of production, rather than excellence of workmanship, is aimed at; but occasionally books are found upon which the skill of the printer has been displayed not only in the printing, but in the setting of the type. It is, however, to be regretted that these instances are comparatively rare.

Colour Printing, for the purpose of book-illustration, has not made the progress we expected. Its chief excellence has been exhibited in the production of Children's Books and Complimentary Cards; the most notable exception being a volume of "Alpine Plants," in which some of the flowers are given with wonderful delicacy and truthfulness. It is possible that we must look for true excellence in colour printing chiefly where the number of copies to be worked is very large, so that the cost of the original production becomes almost nominal, as in the case of Toy Books, Complimentary Cards, &c., orders for which are given by tens of thousands.

Of the Literature of the Season there is no need here to speak; some account of it will be found in the following pages.

The Air and its Phenomena (L'Atmosphère: Description des Grands Phénomènes de la Nature). Par Camille Flammarion. (Paris: Hachette and Co.)—Of late years numerous works of what may be called a popular-scientific character have been produced by Frenchmen, and this is another addition to the list. It is a splendid example of intelligent compilation and elaborate illustration; for, to speak of the latter first, it contains fifteen beautiful chromo-lithographs, and no fewer than 228 wood engravings, many of which are of high cha-The author begins at the beginning, and tells all that he knows, or can discover, about "that fluid in which and by which we live;" and ventures on some speculations as to the nature of the fluid that fills the space beyond the limits of our terrestrial atmosphere; with discussions as to the height to which the latter ascends, and remarks upon its density or rarity under peculiar conditions; its formation, and meteorological peculiarities; the force it exerts in wells, pumps, mines, &c. in caverns, and on mountains; the invention and use of the barometer; and the nature of the gases and vapours, &c., which the air holds in solution or carries from place to place. Then he speaks of the creatures that inhabit the air, myriads of which are only discoverable by aid of the microscope; the faculty possessed by plants and flowers of inspiring and expiring air, and so retaining or expelling certain gases necessary to their existence; the action of the air upon the respiratory organs of men and animals; the distinction between respiration and combustion, and the way in which the air conveys light and sound, heat, cold, rain, and snow; the dews of evening, the rose-tinted clouds of spring, the clear azure of summer, and the dreary fogs of winter; with much valuable information as to the mirage, &c.; rain, electricity, thunder, lightning, and other meteoric phenomena Afterwards he proceeds to describe the science of ærostation, and particularly with regard to some notable balloon ascents which have been lately undertaken for purely scientific purposes; producing altogether a volume which may be perused by the scientific with pleasure, and by the general reader with both pleasure and profit.

Pictures by Charles Robert Leslie, R.A.

Pictures by Charles Robert Leslie, R.A. With Descriptions, and a Biographical Sketch. By James Dafforne. (Virtue.)—Leslie is undoubtedly the painter best known and most deeply appreciated by that large class of Englishmen who do not care either for the heroic or "high Roman" style, or for that realistic treatment of low and vulgar subjects the merit of which consists in the likeness of a work to the original. He painted simple and unostentatious subjects: scenes from Shakspeare, Sterne, Cervantes, Goldsmith, and writers of kindred genius, were his constant theme, and these he produced with unrivalled skill. Possessing not only facility in execution, but a cultured and imaginative intellect, he was able to give a reading of his author worthy of the original, and to appeal to the public with unexampled effect. Who, at the mention of his name, does not recall some favourite production? Is it the Taming of the Shrew? or the Scene from Henry VIII.? or some incident in the career of Tristram Shandy, or Don Quixote, or the Vicar of Wakefeld? Whichever it is, an admirer of Wakefeld? Whichever it is, an admirer of Leslie seems to regard him with more of personal esteem than he bestows on any other painter, our hearts, and partly, no doubt, from ment they have received. The selection tures made by Mr. Dafforne is admirto show Leslie's qualities to their full irst we have "Sancho and the one of the most noted of all his works;

and this is followed by a work even more popular "Uncle Toby and the Widow Wadman," M: Dafforne thinks no one in our generation resis the immortal humorist from whose work the tik ture is derived. ""Tristram Shandy," says it. "has long since shared the fate of more worthy books, and has passed into oblivion;" and a cordingly, he extracts some passages from the work, so as to enable readers "to compress the subject of the picture!" The eager conwhich is always around the picture in the National Gallery is surely a tribute not only to the sall is the artist but to the genius of the author. "A tolycus," king of beggars and of pedlar, is to known to all readers of the Winter's This man in the third picture of this series we see in a the door of the old shepherd's cottage, pair off his wares to his astonished and simple mixed auditors. Next comes "Florizel and Petal from the same play, in which the chief feat figure has never been surpassed for the sweeter of her expression. Then we are introduced "Falstaff and his Friends," a party assembled an oak-panelled dining-room in Page's hour? Windsor. "Sancho Panza" follows-not Sant at ease with the Duchess, but when, ex altered circumstances, he was "whipped an A scene from L I'm a government." geois Gentithomne, revealing a passage of artibetween M. Jourdain and his servatural, Nicole; another from Le Malade Imagrature of Olivin in Touchel Market, annualling hered of of Olivia, in Twelfth Night, unveiling herself, or plete the list. To criticise the pictures is a needed: they are known and appreciated by art-lovers. It is enough to say that these reproductions of them are not only among the most admirable specimens of the line-engraver's art, but serve to give an adequate idea of the famous originals. Mr. Dafforne's "Memoir" of Leslie is gracefully written.

Popular Romances of the Middle Age. Br George W. Cox, M.A., and Eustace Hinton (Longmans.)-Mr. Tennyson's lorb have had the effect of popularising the Arthunia Iones. romances. Incidentally, too, they have been means of directing the attention, first of schools then of the popular mind, to other romane of the middle ages. These stories throw light the progress of human culture and the sinar of civilization, and as such only would be work But they are interesting in themselves. tunately, however, in form the mediard to mances are such as to weary most reader, and it is this fact which inspired the editors of the book whose title we have quoted to present them to Englishmen of the present day in "a form which shall retain the real vigour without the repulsive characteristics impressed upon them by a comparatively rude and ignorant age." The reparatively rude and ignorant age sult is that nine romances are given in a space scarcely more than half that which the Aribus started of the st story alone occupies in the pages of Sir Thomson Malory. THACKERAY.

12.32.25 Jr. 2012; The place in English literature held by Thackeray is yet to be decided. Though we a possession of all his acknowledged works, Though we are in - Car can trace, with something like certainty all he has written in magazines, newspapers, and other byways of letters, there is still some doubt as to the precise niche in the Temple of Fame in the stands which he is to take his stand. None but great artists create schools of art, and those, therefore, who adopt their styles may be considered rather as disciples than as imitators. Thackeray founded a school, and his pupils, though not numerous, are earnest in admiration of their master, and without hesitation place him at the head of modern humorists, and give him a very high position among English novelists. His detractors, on the contrary—and what great 1 No 22 man is without them?—are equally bold in pro-_g_r tg 15 nouncing him a mere cynic and egotist, with a 133.20 certain happy manner of saying good things. -he is undoubtedly inferior to many lesser men. === 15 Comparison has often been made-perhaps unnecessarily, for the two writers had little in com-I = mon beyond the faculty of enchaining the attention of their readers-between Dickens and Thackeray; not always to the advantage of the latter.
In his fictions Thackeray was less careful than Dickens as to the regular march of incident and the gradual development of plot, and certainly less apt in marking his characters by peculiarities of dress and oddities of manner. We all know Pickwick by his gaiters, Dombey by his neck-cloth, and Carker by his teeth; but we recognise Thackeray's people rather by their modes of thought and by the characteristics that belong to the classes they are intended to represent, than by individual traits or eccentricities of costume or speech. Thus we accept Colonel Newcome, -- 3 -k 100 Arthur Pendennis, Captain Costigan, and Becky Sharpe as the unmistakable and unquestionable types of the highborn English gentleman, the educated journalist, the raffish Irishman, and the fascinating, unscrupulous adventuress. Thackeray's men and women by what they think; Dickens's by what they say and do. The humorist's characters possess a faculty of mental growth rarely observable in the creations of the popular novelist: in the one case, the more we know of them the better we like them; in the other, they remain at the end of the story precisely and exactly what they were at the beginning. Dickens takes his characters almost exclusively from the lower and middle classes; Thackeray from the town houses, the clubs, and the country seats of the wealthy and refined. But that he was not an uninterested observer of human nature in the servants' hall, the porter's lodge, and the side-wings of the theatre, his inimitable portraits of Jeames the Footman, Fanny Bolton, and Miss Fotheringay, who afterwards became Lady Mirabel, sufficiently prove.

It was not unnatural that it should be so. Dickens, in his early life, was familiar with the streets, and was not unacquainted with the shifts and struggles of poverty; while Thackeray, when he had lost one-half his patrimony, dissipated the other, and had turned to his pen for a living, drew his inspiration from his youthful experiences of the public school, the university, the drawing-room Each man wrote about and deand the Court. scribed the life with which he was most familiar, and so became a master in the school he founded.

Another point of distinction between Thackeray and the popular novelists is to be found in his large experience of continental life, derived from his early wanderings through France and Germany and his travels in the East, afterwards supplemented by a residence of some months in Ireland. When Thackeray began to write for a living, he naturally turned these experiences to account—in "The Paris Sketch Book," "A Journey from Cornhill to Grand Cairo," "The Kickleburys on the Rhine," "The Second Funeral of Napoleon," and "The Irish Sketch Book." In these we find the originals of his impecunious Frenchman, his pompous Cockney, his educated Englishman, his weak, good-natured Irishman, his irrepressible Jeames-rough sketches and preparatory studies, as it were, for the full-length portraits afterwards to be exhibited in "Vanity Fair," "Pendennis," and "The Newcomes." In these works he shows himself at his best as a social satirist and a ripe scholar; his college training and desultory life contributing to both. But it was in his later works,—"Esmond," "The Virginians," and "The Adventures of Philip"—he displayed that samiliar and loving acquaintance with the literature of the Steele and Addison era, afterwards demonstrated in his lectures on the "English Humorists," and the "Four Georges," delivered for several seasons both in England and America; and which peeped forth unconsciously in the "Roundabout Papers" of the Cornhill. As a writer, Thackeray possessed a wonderful degree of strength, ease, and simplicity, combined with fluency of manner and correctness of diction; with occasionally, it must be confessed, a little humorous egotism and discursive gossip: but then what gossip and egotism! However frequently they delayed the course of the narrative, and stopped the action of the plot, would we miss a sentence of either now?

It is no part of our intention to describe the successive steps by which Thackeray rose from obscurity to fame; from an unknown contributor to the Times, under Barnes; to the Morning Chronicle, before the traditions of its influence had quite passed away; to Fraser's Magazine, where, under the nom de plume of Michael Angelo Titmarsh, he was known and appreciated by a public select but few; to Punch, and a score of other newspapers and periodicals. Nor can we give a Is not their bibliolist of his tales and sketches. graphy written in the book of Alibone? But what we have written, we have written with the design of directing public attention to the fact that a new and popular edition of Thackeray's works is now in course of publication; that "Vanity Fair," in many respects the author's most original and characteristic novel, has already made its appearance; and that the "Newcomes" and "Pendennis," each a masterpiece of its kind, have followed. Thousands have yet to become acquainted with the wonderful power, the critical acumen, the cynicism (if you will), and the irresistible pathos of Thackethe you will, and the irresistible pathos of Thackeray. His great contemporary, Dickens, in the Cornhill Magazine of March, 1864, bears eloquent testimony to the "carnest feeling," the "far-seeing purpose," the "loving picturesqueness," the "frankness," and "genius" discoverable in all that he wrote; and the time is surely coming for a fuller and more appreciative understanding of a fuller and more appreciative understanding of the character of Thackeray, and an infinitely more favourable verdict upon the merits of his works than any yet pronounced.

The author, thus taking into account the general historical circumstances under which Holbein lived, attempts to realize, as far as possible, "all that we know concerning him, and of finding the just position in which the master stood to the mental current and to the culture and art of the time." Dr. Woltman, having traced the historical revolution in Italy and Germany, and described the nature and scope of the Renaissance, especially with regard to Germany, takes us to Augsburg, which has been called "the Pompeii of the Renaissance," and explains why it was that only from the city of German Renaissance the painter of German renaissance would come forth. Here, in 1495, Hans Holbein was born; and here he made his first attempts in art. The greatest of Northern portrait painters, he appears as such in his earliest efforts. "Masterly in his technical skill," says our author, "he adds to the accuracy and delicacy which drawing in metallic pencil entails, a rare power and richness. CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED GUINEA BIBLE.

Some years ago we drew attention to the fact at Cassell's Illustrated Bible was in many rects, independently of the teaching of the Book elf, one of the most interesting and delightful ture-books ever issued. The republication of assists in the comprehension of the fact itself. Thus, the mention of the harp of David enables the annotater to introduce the different musical instruments of the Jews, the dulcimer, the sackbut, the cornet, with the trumpets blown the work on superior paper, with all the specialities of a Family Bible, enables us to reiterate our belief as to its value and importance, in a strictly popular sense, to education by means of pictures. Every striking fact in both the O'd and New Testament is illustrated with an engraving, which

Then, again, the introduction of engravings into the text of the Bible is a direct incentive to the reading the text itself, which in this edition is carefully annotated and provided with parallel passages. Indeed, whether we regard Cassell's Family Bible as merely a Bible with notes, as an educational volume, or as a beautiful picture-book, we are equally astonished at is completeness, its thoroughness, and its entire adaptation to the needs of its readers. A more handsome and acceptable volume, in every sense, it is hardly possible to produce: and, moreover, it is cheap—which, in these days of competition, is a great recommendation.

THE HOMES OF OTHER DAYS.*

The origin of this handsome volume, which is dedicated to Lord Lytton, is due to his lordship's "Harold." The description of the residence of the sorceress Hilda—of the change from the Roman villa to the mansion of the Anglo-Saxon—so impressed the author that he at once meditated a book which should be a complete and carefully compiled history of the domestic manners and economy of our forefathers, from the earliest period at which we can obtain any knowledge of it down to recent times. Those who know Mr. Thomas Wright know him as an earnest student in historical and archeological research. He is a professed antiquary; but he is no Dryasdust. He has the art of popularizing dry subjects, and in this work he has been singularly happy. In the preface he has fully explained his object. We have upon, in regard to society, as the English Middle Ages; and they, therefore, hold properly the largest space in the volume. The fifteenth century forms again a distinct period in the history of society—it was, in fact, the close of our Middle Ages. At the Reformation we come to a new transition period—the transition from mediaral to modern society. In twenty-six chapters Mr. Wright treats of the progress of society, and off warious changes and modifications it underwent during these years. There is hardly a subjet to be named about which he does not supply information—and information not conveyed in dry and meagre form, but full of interest. How the people lived at home; the general arrangements of a Saxon, Norman, and mediæval house, the meal, the chamber and its furniture, bed and bed-room, the

Mr. Wright's aim has been to guided them. bring together a sufficient number of plain facts, in a popular form, to enable the general reader to form a correct view of the Middle Ages. Instead of taking each particular division of the subject, one after the other, and tracing each separately through the whole period en braced by the volume, he divides his subject into set historical periods, in each of which all the different phases of social history for that period are included. This plan is natural. During the Anglo-Saxon period the social system was the groundwork of that we now enjoy. The Norman Conquest brought in foreign social manners totally different, but they became gradually incorporated with the Anglo-Saxon, until, towards the end of the twelfth century, they formed the English of the Middle Ages. The thirteenth and fourteenth centuries we may look garden, out-of-door amusements, in-door amuse ments; the arts, such as singing, music, and painting; cookery, travelling, education, punishments, literature, inns and taverns, baths—are some of the innumerable topics discussed. The work is rich in pictorial illustrations taken by Mr. Wright from contemporary illuminated works.

Of the quaint and curious woodcuts which embellish the volume, we select two. The first represents a group of ladies hunting the stag. In all the illuminations of the period we are told that ladies engaged in hunting or hawking are represented on horseback "invariably and unmistakably riding astride." This is the case in the cut given; but, as Mr. Wright observes, most of the mediæval artists were so entirely ignorant of perspective, and they were so much tied to conventional modes of representing things, that when, no doubt, they intended to represent ladies riding sideways, the latter seem often as if they were riding astride. As a further illustration of domestic manners towards the latter part of the fifteenth century, we give an interior—the "Nursing Chamber." It is taken from Lydgate's "Metrical Life of St. Edmund," and The fittings represents the birth of that saint. of the bed are rich; the chimney is ornamental in character, and has three recesses for candlesticks,

There must be a public for such tales, or they would not be printed in America and reprinted here; and though they contain elements of interest quite distinct from those belonging to Family Herald and New York Ledger stories, they are certainly fairly written and entertaining. "Real Folk" is a story of this pattern, almost without a plot-or, at least, such a plot as can be epitomised; but yet abounding with natural touches of pathos and humour, such as we do not recognise in popular tales of home manufacture, which are, too commonly, either very sensational or very prosy.

EASTLAKE'S HISTORY OF THE GOTHIC REVIVAL.*

This is an attempt to show how the taste for mediaval architecture which lingered in England during the last two centuries, has since been encouraged and developed. The causes which brought about, and the events which attended, one of the most remarkable revolutions in national art that this country has seen appeared to Mr. Eastlake worthy of record, and, accordingly, although the antiquaries of the seventeender-fauned the desire they had themselves treated a knowledge of what had been bequeated as in the Middle Ages, the taste was of slow good Horace Walpole affected the Gothic side. Strawberry Hill was considered a Gothic laber but nothing could have been in worse tast the the outlandish architectural abortion which are he set himself to produce a work on the subject. Although chiefly concerning himself with architecture, the author incidentally touches upon all the various phases of the movement which began at the end of last century. He shows how the taste began, was fostered, and has been developed. After the Renaissance, medieval architecture and medieval art declined in public estimation, and, its origin to the author of the "Castie of Ormals Beckford followed in the wake of Walpale; it is undoubtedly to the genius of Sir Walson Scott that is owing the rapid change in pataste. His Waverley Novels gave an imperison the revival, sudden, unexpected, and strong; as since his time, the tendency in favour of me wealism has never abated. Mr. Eastlake given an elaborate history of the movement, materials warious stages, and chronicles the names works of the men by whom the movement was effected. His work, moreover, is illustrated with numerous full-page engravings of buildings characteristic of progress or change introduced by architects. As a specimen, we present our readers with a view of the chancel of St. John's Church, Torquay, erected by Mr. Street in 1869. St. John's Church, like many other churches built at the present day, was begun before funds had been subscribed for the whole edifice, and consequently the chancel was built, enriched, and decorated before the rest of the building was complete. As an example of wood cutting in which accurate scientific detail is combined with artistic treatment, it will be seen that the cut deserves high praise. Mr. Eastlake's impartiality in his criticisms has struck us throughout. He deals praise and blame without regard to evident preconceived notions, and this feature will tend to make his work a text-book, as it deserves to be.

STONES OF THE TEMPLE.*

CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS.

SAT, well printed, well bound, appropriately istrated, useful-these are the terms which may tracterize the publications of the S.P.C.K., If it is familiarly called; and to their other alifications it may be added that they are all of eligious tendency, even the most secular among m being intended to subserve the progress of rality and education. A very brief notice will fice to introduce to the notice of the reader more prominent of the volumes recently issued I the Society.

The Four Gospels, arranged in the Form of a Harmony, from the Text of the Authorised Version, by the Rev. J. M. Fuller, M.A., Editorial Secretary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, with four maps, illustrating the journeys of Our Lord. This latter book is published under the direction of the Tract Committee.

The British Workman for 1871 (S. W. Partridge and Co.), consisting of the twelve penny numbers published during the year, is a very handsome volume in paper covers, with an outer picture, in colours, representing "King Canute Reproving his Courtiers." For suitableness of design, correctness of drawing, and brilliancy of colour, this picture is equal to anything of the kind, and is quite worthy the distinction of a gilt frame. Indeed, many of the page engravings of the "British Workman" have been reprinted on large paper expressly for the purpose of hanging on the walls of workshops, schools, barbers' shops, cabins, &c.; and very appropriate wall-papers they make. Some of the best of our draughtsmen as John Gilbert, Harrison Weir, Birket Foster, and Henry Anelay-make drawings for this periodical, which drawings are carefully engraved by J. Knight and others. Sometimes a fine picture is reproduced on wood, and occasionally a telling passage from a great author is illustrated in an engraving nearly half the size of a page of the Times. Thus the story of the "Two Gardeners," from Lord Lytton's "Caxtoniana," is made the means, both by pen and pencil, of enforcing the story of the story o the value of self-culture; and Harrison Weir's "Plea of the Birds" is accompanied by a poem in favour of their preservation from the guns of sportsmen and the birds'-nesting proclivities of schoolboys. Scores of smaller engravings illustrate the pithy articles, apt selections, and valuable suggestions which form the text of each number; and the work altogether does great credit to its editor, Mr. Smithies.

The Band of Hope Review, by the same publishers, provides the children with a large quantity of amusing and improving reading, illustrated, like the "British Workman," with full-page and other engravings-the picture on the outside of this, the eleventh yearly volume, representing an Italian peasant teaching a child to blow the flageolet; and the engraving on the title-page giving us the portrait of a "Chichester Band of Hope Boy," in his sailor's shirt and cap. Published monthly, in halfpenny numbers, this periodical enjoys an enviably large and really influential cir-

MR. HOTTEN'S FINE ART, HUMOROUS, AND OTHER PUBLICATIONS.

Hotten is ambitious. To him as a publication and the finest t-book of the season—over which the connoisance of may linger delightedly; and the funniest resulting the may linger delightedly; and the funniest resulting to the majority of the season—over which the connoisance of the season—over which the connoisance of the season—over which the connoisance of the season—over which the funniest ty be read at the risk of buttons and staylaces, tween the two extremes he provides books for curious, the studious, the practical and the ginative; books of travel, history, fiction, antity, poetry and drollery. And the great merit them is, that at whatever time of the year they issued, they are always capitally fitted for the n Beautiful Pictures we have a series of the st exquisite line engravings from the works of principal British artists of the present century—size lkie, Constable, Turner, Mulready, Landseer, School Clise, Ward, Frith, Gilbert, and others; with many deditorial text from the pen of Mr. Sydney mytage, printed on large quarto, and tastefully as handsome and satisfactory a well known Greek legend, half a dozen picprinted in gold and colours. Lastly, among Hotten's Fine-Art books we have "Maiden urs, and Maiden Wills," representing, in enty-four plates, the presumed occupations of a ing lady of fashion, at the height of the London son, from her awaking in the morning to her tet, her lunch her with the morning to her et, her lunch, her visit to the Academy, her rning call, her ride in the Park, her dinner, her ur at the opera, her flirtation at the ball, her oper, her return through the silent streets, and Asleep at Last;" each subject freely and artistily drawn, and printed on stone, in a rich sepia , with verses from the poets, and quotations from ll known authors, in place of a descriptive text. Among what may be called the Humorous books have our old friends Artemus Ward, Bret Harte, irk Twain, and Hans Breitmann, in their "Lec-es," "Eye-openers," "Screamers," and "Sen-ional Novels," with "That Heathen Chinee," ional Novels," with "Inat Heathen Uninee," istrated; new editions of the "Genial Show-in;" reproductions of "Cruikshank's Comic manack" from 1848 to 1853; Hogarth's "Five ys' Peregrination by Land and Water," in ia drawings from the original of 1732, with "Hudibrasticks," as illustrated by Hogarth; erce Egan's "Finish" to the Adventures of the interval of the inte m, Jerry, and Logic, with Robert Cruikshank's s—a large octavo volume; and Colman's Broad Grins," with Hogarth's frontispiece of the ughing Audience and Buckstone's Memoir. addition to these we may mention Wright's History of Caricature," a portly and handsome tume full of curious woodcuts; "The Fools' radise," a book of German drolleries, "awfully" iny, printed in colours; and "Little Charlie's fe of Himself," an autobiography of a child tween six and seven years old, professing to be actual transcript from his MS. copybook, with its oddities of writing, drawing, and spelling; curious production, which looks real, if only in the gradual improvement discoverable in the renile author's style: As when he says—"The le and trifling things that happen every day I ve determined not to mention. It is the great

d important events I shall tell of. Among ese I ought to speak of the departure of my rents to a foreign land. Their society was a eat loss to me but they were going for pleasure d health and that was enough for me." But e funniest of all the funny books, however, is The Innocents Abroad," printed and bound in d cloth, gold lettered, exactly like "Murray's Handbooks," and labelled "Mark Twain's Pleasure Trip to the Continent."

It may be prejudice, but we like the Comic Almanack as well as any of the newer works—New, did we say?—It is always fresh, new, and delightful. Like Hone's "Every Day Book," it may be taken up at any time, and something funny and laughable will crop up—Cruikshank never palls, his designs bear looking at over and over again. What a history, too, there is in the Almanack! People talk of the Times being a daily record of the nineteenth century; but whoever saw a volume of the Times, or, having seen it, ever attempted to read it? You might as easily extract sugar from mangel-wurzel, as the past history of the country, from a volume of the Times; but in the Comic Almanack everything of moment is epitomised. Open at random, and you will find the question wittly discussed.—"Who shall educate the Prince of Wales?" "The Rise and Progress of the Strong-Minded Woman Question"—"The Death of Stage Coaches and Post-Boys"—in truth, wherever the volume is opened, there we discover a mine of history enshrined in wit history enshrined in wit.

Of the Other Books we may mention "The Magician's Own Book," with instructions in leger-demain, prestidigitation, conjuring, sleight of hand, and parlour magic, by the author of "The Secret Out," which also appears in a new edition, illustrated—each of them—by upwards of two hundred explanatory diagrams; "The Merry Circle," a book of new and curious indoor games for ladies and gentlemen; the "Works of Ben Jonson," in three volumes; the "Works of Rabelais;" the first and second series of the "Popular Romances of the West of England," now issued in a single handsome volume; Thomas Carlyle on the "Choice of Books," with two portraits of the Chelsea Philosopher, one showing him straighthaired, sedate, and respectable, as drawn by D'Orsay, in 1837; another giving his lank features, beard, and collar in their habitual state of delightful confusion, as per photographs; a new edition, the sixth, of Robert Viner's "Notitia Venatica," a treatise on fox-hunting, with the original steel plates, coloured; "Shelley's Poetical Works," including some hitherto unpublished pieces, in a neat 12mo volume; and "Advice to Parties about to Marry," a lot of scraps and cuts, neither wise nor witty, by the Hon. Hugh Rowley.

With the mention of two other books, we must close our notice.

The Cockaynes in Paris. By Blanchard Jerrold. With sketches by Gustave Doré, and other illustrations of the English abroad, from a French point of view.—The great characteristic of the English abroad, according to French artists, is that they have large front teeth, and invariably show them. The typical gentleman in a fluffy hat, light coat, and embroidered shirt, who appears on the frontispiece of the volume, is supposed to represent the typical Englishman—Milord Anglais, full of graceful enjoyment, drinking grogs, and admiring the ladies at the Bal Mabille. We have Mr. B. Jerrold's warrant for the artist's integrity, or we should certainly not have recognized our travelled countryman. In his second chapter the author is rather severe upon his brother Cockneys; but he describes the shops, the streets, and the hotel life of Paris with much gusto.

or Paris with much gusto.

Mary Hollis is a romance, in three volumes, of the days of the Second Charles and Prince William of Orange, by H. J. Schimmel, author of "Lady Carlisle;" and, so far as we have been enabled to judge by a cursory perusal, is quite up to the marked preparate a little beyond—of the novels of the day.

Many Thoughts of Many Minds: Selections 1 from the Writings of the most Celebrated Authors, from the Earliest to the Present Time. Compiled and Analytically Arranged by Henry Southgate. Second Series. (Charles Griffin and Co.)-Justifying himself by a quotation from Dr. Parr,-"If an editor collects materials with industry and uses them with judgment, . . . he will have a claim to public favour, even though he should not possess exquisite taste, profound erudition, or keen penetration,"—Mr. Southgate collects choice passages from all manner of authors, and arranges them alphabetically, from four lines descriptive of Action, by Shakespeare, to half a dozen on the Necessity of Zeal, by Lord Lytton. "I cast my se-cond book," says the Editor, "upon the indulgence of the public, quite aware that what is worthy in it is not mine, but theirs who have made our noble English language so real in thought and sentiment as this volume will show it to be." A book of varied quotations has attractions of its own, and for this reason this second series of "Many Thoughts" will be welcomed. But Mr. Southgate would have considerably increased the value of his work had he given chapter and verse for each passage cited. Of what advantage to students are quotations such as these?-UGLY

As sin. -P. Pinaar.

As death. - E. Moore

As a satyr. -Play, "The Legacy."

Uglier than the frightful fiend by pencils of cloistered virgins drawn. - Davenant.

A little more of the "industry" and "judg-ment" predicated by Dr. Parr—to say nothing of "taste" and "erudition"—would have furnished us with the precise places in the works in Walcot and Davenant in which he found the sentences quoted, and the author of the Play, as well as the act and scene in which occurs the phrase "ugly as a satyr." From the omission of any quotations from the works of Homer, Plutarch, Ovid, Dante, Molière, Rousseau, Voltaire, or Thackeray, we presume we are not to consider them "celebrated authors," though in the index we find the names of Mrs. Trimmer, Poor Robin, Bishop Bloomfield, Ossian, and Sherridan, whoever they may be. It would be too much, we presume, to expect quotations from the writings of Anthony Trollope, Tom Taylor, George Eliot, Charles Reade, Miss Edgeworth, Charlotte Bronte, or even Mr. Tupper, though we find among the "most celebrated authors" such modern writers as W. C. Bennett, Mrs. Crowe, Mr. Dana, Gerald Massey, Paxton Hood, C. Wentworth Dilke, Charles Knight, Robert Mudie, Mr. Phelps, W. Sawyer, and N. P. Willis. It must be said, however, that no book of this kind can approach completeness, however great be the industry and penetration of the compiler. Putting aside, therefore, the omissions and mistakes, which may be supplied and corrected in a future edition, we may say that in this handsome, portly volume the general reader will find much to inform, to delight, and to enlarge his mind.

Under the Blue Sky. By Charles Mackay. (Sampson Low and Co.)—Long and well-known as a pleasing and popular poet, Dr. Mackay now collects his prose contributions to All the Year Round, Robin Goodfellow, and other periodicals, and publishes them in a handsome octavo form, under a happily-suggested title -which, unlike me titles, is entirely appropriate, for the papers asolves are open-air studies of men and nature, ingly expressed. Especially good are the se entitled "Town and Country Sparrows," ic and Misery in London," the "Alphabet Town Creation," and the "Intelligence of Plants." Dr. Mackay speaks plainly and w of Plants. Dr. mackey specific sibly about the modern system of patting general on the back and patronizing poverty. he says, "upon working people in their hom suggests to them that you have a 'misson' reform them, and they immediately put on 1 me: armour to defy you. They do not like to preached at, or lectured at, or patronized by an guid' or rigidly righteous people; and har they will most likely take your money if pages it, you will get but little insight into ther was of life and habits of thought, if you tak time for a twelvemonth. They are on the part against you and will not admit you into fidence, strive as hard as you may. Buring meet with them in the country roads, a. The along with them for miles, not having fare it self upon their company, you may often much quaintance with excellent people, from with can sometimes learn more than they can leave you." In this way he has acquired the known which he so pleasantly imparts; and theres walks and talks is as entertaining a volume ! would wish to take to a chimney-come rewith on a shady garden-seat.

It does not, however, obviate the need of h a work as that now before us. Mr. Skeat's ll-known critical ability pointed him out as litor, and the result of his labours will add to reputation. The first volume contains the ems which Chatterton acknowledged, some of em written as early as his tenth year, prefaced Mr. Bell's memoir; the second contains the called Rowley Poems, prefaced by Mr. Skeat's say. His rhymes are Swinurnian, and the repetition of metaphors is as mononous as that of the poet who writes of the "roses nd rapture of vice." It seems, indeed, that Mr. Buchanan is unable to strike out a path for himself. He travels the ways travelled by others before him, enstead of discovering a path no other has gone, Dedicating his work to Comté, whom he terms—tine times—"spirit of the Great Brow," he gives is his notions in verse of the several political shases under which France has passed since the Revolution of 1789, till the recent capture of Paris byiously imitated from Goethe's "Faust." After "Proem," and a "Prelude before the Curtain," we come to the "Drama of Kings," which, in turn, s followed by what the author terms "Epilude pefore the Curtain." We must confess we have been anable to read the volume. The writer in a note expresses a hope that if readers will do him the honour to peruse the work as a whole, and then patiently contemplate the impression left in their own minds, the first feeling of repulsion at an innovation may give place to a pleasanter feeling. As we have not tried the experiment of perusing the work as a whole, we cannot speak of the "pleasanter feeling" that might be in store for us; but we have read enough to see that Mr. Buchanan has not added to his reputation as a poet.

The Mother's Book of Poetry. Selected by Mrs Alfred Gatty. (Bell and Daldy.)-Selected from some of the most admired poems in the language, and illustrated with numerous fine engravings on steel, this collection may be said to provide just the kind of reading which a mother would wish to place in her daughter's hands. The publishers frankly confess that though the plates have already appeared in more costly volumes, they are now inserted in this book in the belief that, as the production of artists of celebrity, and as choice examples of a style of engraving which, for book-illustration, has, unfortunately, sunk into comparative neglect, they form an acceptable addition to a cheap work. We quite agree with them; for some of the engravings are exquisite in their tone and execution, and satisfactorily illustrate the poems so well selected by the Editor of "Aunt Judy's Magazine."

Verse. By Barzorje Edalje Modi, of Surat, B. A., late Fellow of Elphinstone College, Bombay. (Printed for Private Circulation.)—Three poems appear in this elegantly-printed little book, the "Solar System," the Homejee Cursetjee Prize Poem for 1867; an "Address to the Duke of Edinburgh," presented on the occasion of H. R. H. 's visit to the new Elphinstone College Buildings, in March of last year; and "India Three Thousand Years Ago,"—the last decidedly the best and most poetical in structure and idea. After describing the condition of Hindoostan at the period referred to, the Poet expresses a hope that the influence of English rule may eventually secure the complete tranquillity and happiness of his countrymen:—

"Raise, oh, raise this fallen land,
Turn the darkness into light,
Land that in compare could stand
With the brightest of the bright
O, will India rise again!
Or are Britons come in vain?"

The Immortals; or, Glimpses of Paradise. A Poem. By Nicholas Michell. (Tegg.)—Having already made his mark in literature, it is, perhaps, only necessary to state that this poem forms the fourth volume of the cheap re-issue of Mr. Michell's poems. But as it may happen that some readers are not as yet acquainted with the work, we may add that in the "Immortals" the writer adopts Sir David Brewster's theory of every planet and star in the solar system being peopled with intelligent beings, who, like ourselves, are endowed with a capacity for infinite progressive improvement. This theory is carried to its inatural conclusion in the poem—namely, that the inhabitants of the stars enjoy not only a material life, but finally inherit a beatified immortality. Mr. Michell takes a lofty imaginative flight, and sustains it unflaggingly, the scientific points raised in his argument being fortified by a large body of instructive notes.

*Under the Palms: A Volume of Verse. By Thomas Steele, Ceylon Civil Service, translator of "Kusa Jatakaya, an Eastern Love Story." (Low, Marston, and Searle.)—Collected from Frase's Magazine, Once a Week (when under the editorship of Mr. Dallas), and other periodicals, these verses, written beneath "the warmer sky," and "among the palms and temples of the South," are noticeable as being really poetical, and without that pretension to cynicism so common to the writers of "society verses" in popular serials. The author is too diffident of success to boast himself a poet, but he deserves recognition when he craves it in such a graceful little stanza as this:—

"Still, though my muse may faint and fall,
Though rhymes like these lack reason,
They fully close by wishing all
The best joys of the season."

Art, Pictorial and Industrial: An Illustrated Magazine. Vol. II. (Low, Marston, and Searle. The union of the beautiful and the useful has frequently been attempted, and of late years it has been accomplished-with some degree of successin household decoration, furniture, domestic utensils, and so forth. Years ago the Wedgwoods essayed to introduce beautiful forms and colours into pottery, and about the time of the first Great Exhibition, Mr. Redgrave and others explained, in their lectures and writings, the true principles of art, and how frequently they were outraged in the imitation of natural objects in relief—as animals, birds, flowers, &c.—upon carpets, wall papers, &c. The public mind has been educated at last to receive and perceive the truth of these teachings; in futherance of which this magazine was projected. In its pages Artculture is advocated—not alone in respect to painting, sculpture, and the fine arts, but also in relation to the actual and practical life of the people. Numerous illustrations in heliotype adorn its pages, while art-notes from Paris, Munich, Dresden, and other continental cities are alternated with descriptive and speculative papers on cognate topics by competent writers at home. In the last Christmas BOOKSELLER we said, "We warmly wish the work to obtain the success it undoubtedly merits;" and now, from its appearance in a second volume, we think we may fairly congratulate its promoters and conductors on the fact that it has achieved the success we predicted for it. The heliotypic process is remarkable for the truthfulness with which every detail of the subject copied is reproduced on paper. Take the "Death and the Knight," for instance, from No. 13. Every line of Albert Dürer's etching appears distinctly, with all the lights and shadows faithfully preserved. So also with a portion of Mr. Armstead's altorelievo on the podium or plinth of the Albert Memorial in Hyde Park. In it the figures of Shakespare, Beethoven, Milton, Dante, and other great poets and musicians, are sculptured in the boldest relief. The effect as seen in the heliotype picture is as marvellous as though it were shown through a stereoscope, every projection and depression in the marble being seen with marvellous distinctness.

Ben Burton; or, Born and Bred at Sea. By W. H. G. Kingston. (Low, Marston, and Searle.) Like most of Mr. Kingston's books for boys, this story is full of adventure and incident, with more of design and plot than the author's recent tales present. Ben Burton, the son of a quartermaster on board H.M.S. Boreas, is a good specimen of bold, fearless boys, and tells his own story from his birth on board ship in the China Seas, to his happy marriage with the girl he wooed, and the final consummation of his ambition. "I stuck to my profession, was posted, got the command of a dashing frigate, in which I did good service to my country, and am now a K.C.B., with my flag in prospect." A most fortunate, but rather unusual piece of good luck, even in these days of promotion by merit.

Always remembering that this is a popular rather than a scientific treatise on systematic zoology, we may say that the text and illustrations, studied together, will give a vivid idea of the creatures described. In the engraving selected we have a representation of the water beetles sometimes placed in aquariums by persons unacquainted with their voracity and power of doing mischief. Below is seen the male beetle, in the act of swimming, with its larva;

THE MERRIE HEART.*

Old songs, old tunes, and old tales are always welcome when they are illustrated with new and appropriate engravings. Well, here we have more than a quarter of a thousand of our dear old friends in new dresses, ready to be welcomed in the happy homes of England—which, in the sense here intended, includes also Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and the English-speaking lands across the seas. How heartily and thoroughly the artist has caught the spirit of the book's designer may be seen by a glance at the brave old monarch for whom the four and-twenty blackbirds were baked in a pie:—

"Take pattern by this good king and quee,
And their e-con-o-my;
For if you eat all the pudding to-day,
There'll be none to-morrow to fry."

This jingle is familiar to the peasants of Pershire and Cornwall, where it is sung as commands the "Waggoner," and that still older the not included in this collection:—

"Tom Brown's two little Indians,
Two little Indians;
One ran away, and the other wouldn's say,
Tom Brown's two little Indians,
Two little Indian boys."

"And when the pie was opened, the birds began to sing: Was not that a dainty dish to set before the king?"

This cut is the type of the rest—well engraved, funny, and fitting the rhymes to a nicety. M. E. G. has a capital memory—or a most indefatigable elty for research, which is almost as good—to been enabled to gather together such a choice of jingles and jokes; but in the next ediwould suggest that she should add to int old song "When Good King Arthur his Land," the unexceptionable moral:

Merric Heart: a Collection of Favourite Nursery

The joke of this song—like another—also conted—

"At the battle of the Nile, I was there all the while; I was there all the while, At the battle of the Nile—" lies in the fact of a poor singer repeating the lies over and over again, to a droning air, till the own pany get tired and cry him down. As a book in children, "The Merrie Heart" is sure to be streeceived, being prefaced with a highly colourand very funny picture.

Mont Blanc and its glaciers, the Pyrenees and the Himalayas, are alike depicted with pen and pencil-the one assisting the other with loving truthfulness and tireless zeal. The engraving here selves so tenderly sheltered, which so generously (with their nourishing rivers, the life of Europe) poured out to us their calm, profound, and serene souls!" Written in a like spirit throughout, there is in this exquisite work an amount of interest which, at first sight, one would hardly expect. M. Michelet, in this, as in his previous works, treats nature as a living thing, capable of paying back our reverence and admiration with sympathetic cordiality, and touching our hearts with a sentiment that is neither cold nor insufficient: willingly yielding up its secrets to those who search for them in the evidence the pictorial and literary character of the work. "St. Gothard is, in effect, the centre of the great hydraulic forces of Europe. Not so lofty as many other peaks, it is its colossal bulk which compels the conciliation of the Alps. All the mountains rendezvous at this convenient spot. The Mont Blanc chain, which dominates over the Leman and the Rhine; the ranges of Uri, Glacis, and Appenzell, which strike towards Constance; and, finally, the Rhætian mass, which feeds the Rhine with its three hundred glaciers—all concentrate upon Saint Gothard. Yet it retains little: its surrenders all. It is Saint Gothard which pours out the mighty European rivers towards the four seas; like to the sacred Persian mountain, which also sends its streams to the four corners of the world." And then we have added, in a note, the facts which less poetical readers may wish to know:-"The four rivers issuing from the bosom of Saint Gothard, a vast mountain-nucleus, forming the central nodus, or knot, of the Leopontine, or Bernese, chains of the Alps, are the Rhine, Reuss, the Rhone, and the Tessin, or Ti-The Rhine rises on the eastern slope, the T on the southern, the Reuss on the northern, the Rhone on the western; and all within a circuit of two miles from the mountain centre. The highest peak of the mountain is 10,600 feet above the sea-level." By "sacred Persian mountain," the translator presumes M. Michelet means that of Ararat, or Agridagh, which equally belongs, however, to Russia and Turkey. Had we sufficient space at command, we might easily cite other passages, and introduce other equally finely-engraved illustrations; but, in dismissing the volume, we can only remark that in all respects—text, cuts, printing, and binding—"The Mountain" is a most delightful and satisfactory book.

In the Christmas Bookseller for 1860 we gave some account of Thomas Bewick, the reviver of the art of wood engraving in this country, with specimens of his work, as well as that of his famous pupil, the late William Harvey. We then said that "to Bewick the art of wood engraving owes more than the artists of our day are willing to acknowledge," and an examination of the woodcuts in the volume now before us confirms our opinion. Rough and rude as are some of these cuts, they exhibit evidences of genuine artistic feeling which in some of the laborious fac-simile engravings of the present day we might seek in vain. In Bewick's "British Birds" are to be found engravings that, in many respects, are equal, if not superior to any that have since appeared in popular Natural Histories. Another pupil of Bewick's, the late Robert Branston, was famous for his delineation of fur and plumage. He possessed the art, which now appears to be almost lost, of cutting with a graver such delicate lines as cannot be drawn on wood with either pen or pencil. A glance at Bewick's "Skylark," given in page 24 of Mr. Pearson's preface, will exemplify our meaning. The volume before us furnishes several particulars about Bewick and Goldsmith; and in this respect, therefore, is of considerable interest. Mr. Pearson seems to have interested himself for several years past in collecting the woodcuts known or believed to have been engraved by Bewick, and in searching for and-so far as possible-authenticating the early writings of Gold-He professes to have "discovered at least twenty little works written by Goldsmith during his weary hours of adversity, all bearing trong internal evidence of the author's mind and

The garden, the woods, the fields, the forests, the deserts, the rivers, the mountains, and the plains, have each and all a language and a poetry of their own, eloquently interpreted by Madame Michelet, who has written this volume expressly for Messrs. Nelson. It is a sumptuous and suggestive book, which, like "The Mountain," noticed in another page, could only have been produced by a real lover of nature in all its moods. After describing, in the first chapter, the gardens of Italy and Persia, Pope's garden at Twickenham, and the French gardens at Versailles, the authoress considers how it came to pass that, of all the people in the world, the English love gardens and cultivate trees for the sake of their beauty: how, inhabiting a land not naturally fruitful, they have covered it with meadows and made it bright with flowers. This most interesting theme is discussed with fervour; and, indeed, the entire volume is written in a spirit of poetical fervour both pleasant to read and profitable to think over. Almost every page contains a picture; and sometimes the pen-picture is as beautiful, and quite as suggestive, as the more elaborate creations of the artist. But the work of both pen and pencil has type of poverty, want, and desolation. This desolation. graving, it will be seen, is produced in the mode of the art : not the hard pre-Raffaellite nerism adopted by the illustrators of the shine magazines, but the natural style, which, a st ago, was popularized by such engravers as Thomas son, Harvey, and Jackson; with well-defined lines, properly adjusted half-tints, perspective atmosphere. Why, there is a quarter of a between the woman and the wolf, if there inch; and that, too, without the secribe single knot upon the gnarled bark and roots elms and beeches, or a leaf in the ivy that Our draughtsmen and engine will do well to study the wood engravings appear in this work; for, if they cannot Nature itself, they may at least profit by a amination of a volume which we think the lishers are justified in announcing as "The Gift-Book of the Season."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN'S CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

Described in general terms, these books may said to be unexceptionable in their literature, teful in their illustration, neat in their printing, d choice in their binding; but when we come particularize, we discover that they are various their subjects, and that each volume has a im of its own to separate consideration. This will accord as briefly as may be. First we

"Such a funny man; such a queer queer man, with a hump on his back and very short legs and long arms, and a mouth bigger than anybody's mouth I had ever seen before. And then when we wanted to laugh, Aunt Mary stopped us directly, and said the man was what is called deformed, and could not help being like that," till, when he had described his images them, they changed their minds and began to them, they changed their minds and began to him, and at last to admire him for his devotions little girl. A Christmas Cake, in Four Quarters, by Lady Barker, descriptive of Christmas in England, India, Jamaica, and New Zealand, prettily embodied in four stories, each with its appropriate illustration. Like "Stories About," these tales appeal directly to the hearts of the children, for whom Lady Barker has a gift of story-telling in a natural, truthful, and convincing manner that is alike delightful and enviable. We wish no worse luck may attend any girl or boy of taste and feeling at this jolly Christmas time than to get this Christmas Cake as a gift from friend or relative; and we would just hint quietly to the donor that, when the youngster has read the book, he or she may spend a pleasant and profitable hour in reading it and thinking over it too.

CASSELL'S HISTORY OF THE WAR.

History is written very rapidly now-a-days; by Special Correspondents, by Eye-Witnesses, by Statesmen, and by Soldiers. "Cassell's Illusby trated History of the War between France and Germany" begins with the first causes of the rupture, which is traced to the ancient antagonism leads to action, success treads in the footprints of disaster, and present victory obliterates the re-membrance of past defeat. But it is rather for the abundance and excellence of its illustrations than for the originality of its narratives that this History of the War will be prized. Though the

between the Celtic and Teutonic races. After referring briefly to the idea of German unity and the sudden growth of the war feeling in France, consequent on the plébiscite which the Emperor reckoned on as a new lease of power, the author passes quickly to the first break between the two Powers, the interview between Benedetti and King William at Ems, the adhesion of the South German States to the cause of Prussia, the declaration of war, and the departure of the French army to the frontier under command of Napoleon the Third. Thenceforward the narrative proceeds with the regularity of a panorama: event succeeds event, scene follows scene, action latter are exact and trustworthy—nay, even power fully eloquent sometimes,—the former are vivid, lifelike, and admirable. One of the smaller engravings—selected rather because it fits our page than for any other reason—will justify our praise. The scene is eminently characteristic, and tells its own story more plainly than the story could nessible be teld in page 18. Conveying, too, the possibly be told in words. Conveying, too, the popular notion of the respective combatants in a somewhat satirical, but eminently artistic, man-ner. The newspapers of the day were full of necounts of the accounts of the great contest, numerous books have been published detailing its rise and progress; much has been written in various shapes concerning the causes which led up to, the incidents that belonged to, and the grave events which followed, the Franco-German war. This work gives the most accurate, the most varied, the most popular, and certainly the most pictorial description of them all. One specialty possessed by this volume, which gives it great value as a record, we had almost omitted to mention, namely, its plans of the battles and sieges, which are sufficiently plain and accurate to enable the reader to follow the course of the armies with considerable facility.

Lights and Shadows in a Canine Life: With Sketches of Travel by Ugly's Mistress. (Simpkin and Marshall)—"Ugly' is a rather handsome and decidedly intelligent Scotch terrier, found by its mistress in New York, and subsequently her faithful friend and companion across the Atlantic, and through various Continental cities to England, where—of course—he is stolen. Recovered by means of a reward, he becomes an important witness in a police court against a thievish butler, and, after numerous strange adventures, dies and is buried at Baden-Baden, at the breaking out of the Franco-German war, much to the sorrow of his patient mistress. Following the memoir proper are some sensible reflections on animal instinct and intelligence, the substance of which appears in a sentence—"Can the instinct, which shows itself in love, devotion, gratitude, go out in a breath, in one sigh, and then—nothing?" A capital portrait of "Ugly" prefaces the book.

Alpine Plants: Figures and Descriptions of Some of the most Striking and Beautiful of the Alpine Plants. Edited by David Wooster, F.R.H.S., Assistant Secretary to the Royal Commission on Scientific Instruction and the Advancement of Science, and Joint Editor of the Latest Edition of Loudon's "Encyclopædias of Gardening and Plants." (Bell and Daldy.)—The scope and intention of this elegant volume is so well described by its author that we cannot do better than use his own words. The book—he tells us—"had its origin in a desire to aid the efforts lately made to restore to popular favour the very beautiful little plants which are mostly natives of high latitudes, and which for some years have been treated with unmerited neglect, from the popular taste having, as it is very wont to do, entirely changed, in the in-stance now referred to, in favour of half-hardy plants with very brilliant flowers, or beautifully-coloured leaves, massed in beds in geometric and other flower gardens, or placed in straight or zigzag lines, or in pattern, in large single beds. Though these have, in numerous instances, been most skilfully and artistically arranged, yet, as the number of plants suitable for producing the desired effect happens to be somewhat limited, in the case of large designs the same kinds have to be employed again and again, and thus at length many persons have come to regard this style of flower-garden decoration as being open to sameness and mono-A change in public taste being once more discernible, it was considered a favourable time for the production of a work that should contain figures accurately drawn, and colours from nature, with brief descriptions of some of the rarest, most striking, and beautiful of the Alpine plants; and, aided by skilful artists, the author undertook the work." And very well indeed have both author and artists performed their several tasks; for, though no systematic or alphabetical plan of arrangement has been followed, the description of the plants is sufficiently exact to make even the uninitiated to thoroughly master the text, while the plants themselves have been figured in their natural colours, and sometimes their natural dimensions. The character of these exquisite little flowers will be understood by those familiar with the campanula, candytuft, crocus, and stonecrop of old-fashioned English gardens. Above three hundred plants are figured and described, some of them of rare and strikino beauty. As a guide to those who have a wish to cultivate this pretty and delicate class of plant, we may safely recommend this volume.

Western India Before and During the Mutiny. Pictures Drawn from Life by Major General Sir George Le Grand Jacob, K.C.S.I., C.B., &c. (Henry S. King and Co.)—British rule in India, notwithstanding all that has been written and spoken on the subject-in blue books, histories, travels, and fictions; in the Houses of the Legislature, on platforms and in pulpits; by statesmen, travellers, soldiers, missionaries, and all manner of people who have crossed and recrossed the Pacific—is still a topic but slightly understood or dimly apprehended by the British public. In General Jacob's account of Western India we get, however, a fuller and more understandable account of the natives and the government under which they exist than we remember to have seen elsewhere. Of course, he is more at home with the military than with the social element of Indian life; but his remarks on Indian political service and the daily work that has to be performed by commissioners, agents, superintendents, deputies, and assistants, strike us as more to the purpose than much we have seen in works of higher pretensions. All these officers, whether civil or military, control—he tells us—"with more or less of diplomacy, or of direct power, both kings and people. In the larger states, under treaty engagement, these duties are mainly diplomatic; but even in these large classes have come in some measure under British protection by guarantees and stipulations, so that the ambassador becomes a perpetual umpire in disputes between the Crown and its subjects, to an extent calling for great discrimination and tact; and when the power of the Crown has become too weak to enforce its jurisdiction, criminal courts have been established, of which the British agent is ex officio judge-in many cases the Rajah retaining only his titles and honours, the Englishman performing his duties." This brief extract shows us at once what important parts our Indian civil servants have to perform—services which more than once or twice in our Eastern history have been instrumental in preserving peace or precipitating war. Differing in many noticeable respects from popular books on India—such as "The European in India," "Indian Experiences," &c., valuable as many of them are—this volume contains not only an account of the events that occurred during the author's military and political control, but many hints and bits of advice that may well be studied by statesmen; and numerous suggestions the adoption of which in time may prevent the outbreak of another such a rebellion as that of 1857-58, which shook our Indian empire to its foundations, and from the effects of which its people have even now barely recovered. The gallant veteran may be congratulated on having produced a very readable volume.

The Rev. William Morley Punshon, M.A.: a Sketch of his Life; with Sermons recently Delivered by him in London; and a Variety of Choice Selections from his Public Addresse, Discourses, and Writings. (A. Osborne.)—So completely is this neatly-printed little volume described in its titlepage, that it is only necessary to add a line, stating a fact which will be doubtless interesting to the eloquent minister's admirers—namely, that it is prefaced by an excellent and characteristic portrait.

MESSRS. NISBET'S PUBLICATIONS.

Long known as the publishers of a class of books which find ready acceptance in the houses of the wealthy and refined, Messrs. Nisbet have this season produced several volumes after the old and approved pattern, to some of which we briefly draw the attention of our readers.

St. Paul in Rome; or, The Teachings, Fellowships, and Dying Testimony of the great Apostle in the City of the Cæsars. Being Sermons preached in Rome in the Spring of 1871; with an Introduction by J. R. Macduff, D.D., author of "Memories of Bethany," &c.—The identity of historical sites, especially in Jerusalem and Rome, has often been disputed; nor in referring to the spots pointed out by the hired guides as the scene of this or that event in the life of St. Paul, does Dr. Macduff insist upon their unfailing accuracy. On the contrary, he puts it as a matter of question, when he says:—" The Christian Church planted by the great Apostle in the City of the Cæsars never ceased to exist, and a knowledge of those haunts such as his hired lodging, his dungeon, and the place of his martyrdom and death—all undoubtedly known to the early converts, could hardly fail to be confided as a hallowed secret, a sacred legacy, from generation to generation." Nor, surely, have we any reason to impeach the accuracy and trust-worthings of the attention witnesses. Thus we have worthiness of the attesting witnesses. Thus we have as the frontispiece to this volume, a photograph of the tomb of St. Paul in the Church of San Paolo, though there is no direct evidence that the Apostle ever even visited the spot. All the recent discoveries of Roman archæology have, however, less interest to the Bible student than the fact that St. Paul did actually plant a Christian Church in the old pagan city, and that that Church still exists. These discourses, bearing more or less on the subject of the Apostle's residence there, were preached on eight successive Sundays to the Protestant con-gregation in Rome, and are now revised and printed in a compact and handy volume, with illustrations

Getting Well: Tales for Little Convalescents, by Mrs. S. H. Bradford and others, are written in that cheerful spirit, with here and there a spice of fun, which children can understand.

Sunbeam's Influence; or, Eight Years After: A Sequel to "Little Elsie's Summer at Malvern," by the Hon, Mrs. Clifford-Butler; a domestic story of great interest to girls, showing that ill-temper is almost as bad to bear as ill-health, and that a kindly disposition, like a sunbeam on a winter's day, warms and brightens all within its influence.

A Tale of Two Old Songs, by the same authoress, is a successful attempt to weave out of Longfellow's poems—the "Bridge" and the "Village Blacksmith"—two stories of every-day life.

Stories of Vinegar Hill, by the Author of "Little Jack's Four Lessons," will be read with attention by thoughtful boys; the "Fowls in the Air," a poaching story, being especially good.

Stellafont Abbey; or, Nothing New, by Emma Marshall, a young lady who is known as the author of several successful tales for girls, is intended to show the need for patience and faith as aids to happiness.

The Physician's Daughters is a girls' story of do mestic interest, with numerous conversations and incidents of a natural and unforced character.

The House in Town-in this case the town The House in Town—In this case the town being Philadelphia, United States—by the Author of "The Wide, Wide World," illustrated with half a dozen woodcuts printed in colours. Silver Sands, a pretty story for girls, by G. E. E. Crampton; Liond St. Clair, a tale of boy life in Scotland, by L. H. Moncreiff; The Court and the Kiln, a story founded on the Church Catechism, by the Author of "Janet Grey"; The Creak, a village episode; Today and Vesterday, a tale of summer and winter housing spent by a party of happy children, by his E Marshall; and The Wild Bells and total the Rang, a New Year's story for little people, app tally told.

MESSRS. GROOMBRIDGE AND SONS PUBLICATIONS.

THE books published by Messrs. Grombridge have a specialty. They are all instructive. Whether scientific, biographical, or pacifical whether they contain directions for gardening, cooking, or bird-preserving, or even if they be simple pictures, their mission is to fast with they entertain to the mission is to fast with they entertain; to "improve the mind and cla-cate the heart." The volumes issued by this firm during the present season by no means depart from the line we have indicated; but each book teachs us something we are glad to know, in a component dious and pleasant manner. First on our list is-

Marvels of Pond Life; or, a Year's Microsopic Recreations among the Polyps, Infusoria, Rotlers, Water-Bears, and Polyzoa. By Henry J. Slack, F.G.S., Secretary to the Royal Microsopicative Society. Second Edition. Illustrated with Coloure Debets of the Polysia Second S Plates, and numerous Wood Engravings. - Asanin troduction to an agreeable branch of microscopical study, this work possesses a high degree of menti-the scientific and pictorial description of the mamerous inhabitants of the pond for every month in the year being preceded by a useful chapter on the proper use of the microscope.

Next we have a new book by Shirley Hibbert entitled The Amateur's Flower Garden, which, by aid of pen and pencil, provides a handy guide to the formation and management of the flower garden, and the proper method of cultivating such flowers as are best fitted for town or suburban gardens. Some of the designs for laying out small gardens are very pretty and ingenious, while, so far as we can judge, the directions for rearing and propagating flowering plants are at once practical and trustworthy. Following this, we have a thin octavo, in a handsome crimson cover, entitled-

Curiosities of Entomology; consisting of descriptions of bees, butterflies, moths, beetles, ephemera and other insects, with their transformations, egg nests, &c., exquisitely figured in colours on full page plates, and by wood engravings in the text Some of the insects shown are very curious and beautiful, especially those included under the terms Mimetic Analogy, which expresses the ex-traordinary imitations of leaves, birds, stones twigs, or of other creatures, assumed by some kinds of butterflies; the same fact being observed in birds, reptiles, &c., which are scarcely distinguishable from the foliage or the ground on which they live.

The remaining books before us are of similar size and character, with full-page frontispieces and woodcut illustrations:

Oscar: A Tale of Norway, and other stories, Mossat, the Missionary, and other stories, with a medallion portrait.

Round the World; and other stories, one of which is a description of Layard's Travels and Discovering in Niversity Discoveries in Nineveh.

Alfred the Great; and other stories, including one on the Rise, Progress, and Decay of the Crusades in the Middle

Crusades in the Middle Ages; and—
The Children and the Sage; The Seeker and the Finder; and The Story of Wellington. All these tales are very interesting, and well printed. Louis Duval: a Tale of the French Revolation, and two other stories, illustrated, and well worth reading.

Ir interesting stories, appropriate essays, clever poems, good printing, artistic illustrations, and, above all, careful and conscientious editing, can ensure public patronage, then Messrs. Strahan's Magazines should be great successes. And seeing that their magazines have now been before the public for several years, and that each volume issued contains some special feature, and is, so far, an improvement on its predecessor, we may fairly assume that the success sought has been actually achieved.

Good Words for 1871. Edited by Dr. Norman Macleod.

Good Words for the Young. Edited by George MacDonald.

The Sunday Magazine. Edited by Thomas Guthrie, D.D.

Good Words is so well known to our readers that to tell them how many capital tales, sketches, and poetical fancies have appeared in the volume for 1871, would be simply to give them information they already possess; but we may be permitted to state that the volume beginning with the new year will contain new stories by Anthony Trollope and Mrs. Oliphant, and that the Sermons preached at Balmoral by the Queen's Chaplains will be published in January and continued throughout the year. With reference, however, to the illustrations in "Good Words," we cannot avoid observing that they lack the softness and perspective that could be desired. This hard style of engraving is, however, on the decline.

Good Words for the Young appears, by the verdict of all its readers, to be just the magazine that is wanted by thoughtful girls and boys. how delighted those young readers are at every new effort made to entertain them is seen in many which the Editor addresses them, in reference to incidents in the tales or descriptive articles; in the very method and style of the writers—some of them writers of high repute, as Jean Ingelow, Mrs. Cupples, Katharine Macquoid, Lady Barker, Dr. Macleod, William Gilbert, and the Editor himself. Nothing more graceful or charming than "Lilliput Levee" has lately appeared, and young readers will therefore he alread to how that appelies tale will therefore be pleased to hear that another tale by the same author will shortly be commenced, in conjunction with the "Traveller's Tales," the "Chested Ship," and "The Great Dutch Admirals," which have already won him favour.

The Sunday Magazine needs but slight mention as it, like the others, has won its own special public; but we may mention the fact that there has just been commenced in its pages a series of important papers on the Charities of London, the Proverbs of the New Testament, and the Resurrection of the Dead tion of the Dead, severally written by Dr. Guthrie, Dean Howson, and Dr. William Hanna. also state that the Star of the East, by the author of "Episodes in an Obscure Life," is the title of the Extra Christmas Number of "The Sunday Magazine."

ALMANACKS, DIARIES, CHRISTMAS CARDS, &c.

THE world is apparently becoming very methodical dical, and everybody keeps or pretends to keep a Diary. The young lady whose acquaintance you make on board the steamer, and afterwards meet at Strasburg, and who appeared so particularly anxious to note the places of interest on the route, will be jotting down some remarks about yourself, and upon her return elaborates the sketch, and you will find yourself described in a manner more picturesque than agreeable. Hence the demand for "Peacock's Royal and Diamond Diaries." Royal for gentlemen, diamond for ladies, bound in the neatest of styles in russia or morocco leather, the larger with bands, the smaller with the nattiest of snaps, which Danies, the smaller with the nattiest of snaps, which may be undone by any gloved hand. The Diaries are nicely printed upon good writing paper. "Letts's Lady's Diary," a cheaply gotup book in showy cloth, and "Letts's Young Gentleman's Diary" will both be attractive to many. Cassell's Illustrated Almanack, with bits of information all more or less useful to all kinds of readers, has a large number of heaviful approximation. readers, has a large number of beautiful engravings, altogether forming one of the most attractive sixpennyworth's ever published. The City Diary. (Collingridge.)—Interleaved with blotting paper, with a large amount of City and commercial information which cannot be found elsewhere.

Everybody's Year Book (Wyman) is a very nicely compiled annual of useful information and amusing reading combined.

Becton's Englishwoman's Almanack contains as usual a large quantity of useful information about cookery, gardening, &c., with several stories and poems illustrated in chromo-lithography.

Res's Diary for 1872, published by Mr. Roderic, Llandovery, is, like its forty progenitors, well printed and useful.

Christmas Cards-We have received from Mr. B. Sulman a packet of the prettiest complimentary cards we have seen; they are not only for Christ-mas and the New Year, but for many other occasions. Naturally, those for Christmas and the New Year predominate. They are printed in colours, some embossed and others illuminated. The drawing and colouring are remarkably good, and some will bear comparison with miniatures of the highest style of hand finish. To describe a hundred or more of these cards is simply out of the question, but they may be purchased with every confidence in their excellence.

CHRISTMAS ANNUALS.

CHRISTMAS READING - in the shape of the extra numbers complimentarily called "Annuals" is issued with nearly all the Monthlies; and Mr. Dickens the younger, who now advertizes himself as Charles Dickens, has, in "Slaves of the Lamp," revived the Christmas number of "All the Year Round." Hence we may presume that the taste for such reading is on the increase. perceive, however, that the Ghost Story is less popular than hitherto, and that the "machinery, or string that held the stories together, has been very generally abandoned. All the "Annuals" are illustrated more or less gaily and effectively; all, or nearly all, are issued in paper covers brilliant with colours; and—which is curious—in only two of them do we find any direct reference to "Old Father Christmas," "Jolly Old Christmas," or to any of the conventional topics which used to be considered appropriate to and inseparable from the season. Of the Christmas annuals we have received a brief description must suffice.

Bagh-o-Bahar is the title of Beeton's Christmas Annual. It is an Eastern romance in several stories, very much after the pattern of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, with a slight flavouring of modern burlesque, intensely illustrated; followed modern burlesque, intensely illustrated; followed by a capital absurdity, entitled "The Rise of the British Republic," with Odger for President— Odger, "whose sole care was to improve the un-derstandings of the people; who, had he become a soldier, had in him the making of a Wellington and a Blucher!" Following these are acting charades, siddles conjundrums and a most wonderful "Plan riddles, conundrums, and a most wonderful "Plan for the Defence of London," contributed by "Our Maniacal Moltke."

The Neap Reef, by Mrs. Parr, author of "Dorothy Fox," is the Christmas number of Good Words. It is a single story of considerable power, the incidents belonging to it taking place in a village unknown to tourists, on the beach, and on the sea beyond.

As the Crow Flies, by Jean Ingelow, is the one principal story in a series of tales issued as the Christmas number of "Good Words for the Young;" all brightly told, and prettily illustrated.

The Christmas Number of London Society is more like what we have been in the habit of considering the proper kind of thing for the holidays than any of the other annuals; for it has a Christmas poem, a ghost story, a madrigal, a fairy legend, a burlesque, and various suitable sketches in verse and prose by Shirley Brooks, Walter Thornbury, George Augustus Sala, Edmund Yates, Clement Scott, and some less-known writers; with a double frontispiece blazing with all the tints of the rainbow, and many other illustrations, plain and coloured.

The Belgravia Annual consists, as usual, of a number of appropriate stories; Miss Braddon, the editor, leading off with a capital one in five chapters, and ending with a terrible one called the "Dreadful Guest;" the several contributions being illustrated by John Proctor, H. K. Browne, and other eminent artists.

The Christmas Number of the Monthly Packet, edited by the author of the "Heir of Redclyffe," contains various stories, one of which, a link be-tween the "Castle Builders," and the "Pillars of the House," is acknowledged to be an old MS. newly revised for the benefit of those who are anxious to know how Sister Constance got into the sisterhood of St. Faith's. Unlike the rest of the Christmas Annuals, this is without illustrations.

Henry Leslie's Musical Annual, published by Messrs. Cassell, will be received with favour by all musicians, for it contains several favourite songs and pieces.

Peter Parley's Annual. Our venerable but ever welcome friend, now ciceroned by Mr. Ben George, of Hatton Garden, appears this year with many genuine claims to attention. Peter Parley has a good deal to tell us about lion hunts, fairy rings, balloons, carrier pigeons, and schoolboy heroism; with many pleasant stories which read as though they were facts, and some pieces of poetry with the true ring; illustrated with ten engravings printed in colours and a number of woodcuts of the good old pattern, and enclosed in a rich binding of crimson emblazoned with gold.

Aunt Judy's Christmas Volume. (Bell and Daldy.)—George Cruikshank is yet a power in the land; for does he not illustrate Aunt Judy's Magazine, and are not his illustrations the most funny, the most artistic, and the most characteristic in the volume? As to its literature, there is nothing we can say of it that is not praise. There are stories for the imaginative, poems for the poetical, riddles and jokes for the jocular, appeals for the charitable, and something for everybodyall included in a handsome cover of crimson and gold, with gilt edges—just the book for good-natured aunts and uncles to present to favourite nieces and nephews.

The Lay of the Last Minstrel. By Sir Walter Scott. (Provost and Co.)—This poem, one of the most popular of Scott's metrical romances, is published in small quarto on fine paper, embellished with photographs of the scenes described, especially taken by Russell Sedgfield. Some of these are very fine. We all remember the opening of the poem—the "Minstrel infirm and old;" how

This is an exceedingly elegant and appropriate Christmas volume, uniform with "Marmion" and the "Lord of the Isles" issued by the same publishers.

Old Merry's Annual. (Hodder and Stoughton.) "To all his young friends Mr. Editor sends cordial greeting, and wishes them a Merry Christmas, a Happy New Year, and many pleasant hours." With these genial words "Old Merry" commences his Annual for Eighteen Hundred and Seventy-With a capital novelette by Miss Mary Darling, any number of pithy tales, numerous brightly-penned sketches of the London streets, several pretty poems, acting charades, and parlour plays for young actors, monthly memoranda of noticeable facts in literature, science, and art, and a whole host of puzzles, enigmas, double acrostics, anagrams, and conundrums — the whole illustrated with woodcuts, and preceded by a frontispiece and title-page in colours-this compact and handsome volume seems well adapted for its special purpose - a gift book, or New Year's present for all inquiring and ingenious

Jack Hazard and his Fortunes. (Low, Marstonand Searle.)—An American story of considerable interest, curiously illustrated with woodcuts engraved after the manner of steel etchings, but, like many Transatlantic tales, full of minute touches of humour, and some rather lengthy, but spirited conversations.

A Theory of Harmony founded on the Tempered Scale. With Questions and Exercises for the Use of Students. By John Stainer, Musical Doctor, of Magdalen College, Oxford. (Rivingtons.)-In the course of a series of lectures delivered at Oxford to musical students, Mr. Stainer found it necessary to draw special attention to the existence of those "doubtful chords," belonging equally to more than one key, to which modern music owes much of its charm and beauty; and to exhibit practically how those chords are formed, and how their combinations result in harmony. The substance of those lectures is here given in a series of chapters, intended for the instruction of musical amateurs, the conclusion arrived at being thus tersely stated: "When musical mathematicians shall have agreed among themselves upon the exact number of divisions necessary to the octave, when machinists shall have invented instruments upon which the new scale can be played, when practical musicians shall have formed a new system of notation which shall point to the performer the ratio of the note he is to sound to its generator, when genius shall have used all this new material to the glory of Art, then it will be time enough to found a Theory of Harmony on a mathematical basis."

Meanwhile, as it is necessary that all Meanwhile, as it is necessary that all musicians should at least know something of the true theory of their delightful art, they are in this volume instructed in the elements of musical science, and taught to distinguish sound from noise, and true harmony from discord.

The Bristol Orphan Houses, Ashley Down. Under the Direction of Mr. George Müller. By W. Else Tayler. Revised and Enlarged Edition. (Morgan and Scott.)—The Bristol Orphan Houses were founded about forty years ago by Mr. George Müller, a young German, who, during a temporary residence in the West of England, became deeply impressed with the necessity for such an institution. From small beginnings the idea has gradually expanded, till now there are about two thousand orphans supported and educated in five commodious houses, the last of which has only recently been erected, the annual receipts from donations and subscriptions having risen from £770 in 1836 to upwards of £20,000 in 1870. As an instance of the good any earnest man may do, and as an account of a remarkably prosperous charity, this book will be read with interest.

The School and the World: A Series of Practical Essays on the Leading Questions of Education in the Present Day. (Simpkin and Marshall.) Fools, in avoiding one error, run into the contrary. This Horatian maxim is the keynote of the volume, which, from Dedication to Finis, may be described as flighty. The Dedication itself is nonsense: "To the Lord of the Manor of this sweet, populous, little suburban village (Arlingham), in the pleasing hope that he may add to his paltry dross of filthy lucre an imperishable jewel of inestimable value—the blessed rule of the Perfect Man; that he may give to this world a Hero, and to the next an Angel, in his Boy (and what easier, if Art would be content to draw out and not disfigure Nature?), this Little Book is respect-fully dedicated by the Author;" who is anonymous. Nevertheless, there is much to commend in his observations about schools and home teaching, female education and university systems, technical instruction and the religious question, the principles of teaching as applied to the rich and the poor, and the future aspect of an educated England.

Poems. By Robert Allan. (Jedburgh: Thos. Small. Edinburgh and Glasgow: J. Menzies and Co.)-The true poet writes as the bird sings; in each case the expression of musical utterances being a necessity of life. To this fact we owe the ever-recurring [publication of fugitive poemssome of great merit, more of little value, and a vast number of no merit or value whatever. which category shall we place the poems by Robert Allan? That they possess considerable merit there can be no question; and though it may be doubted whether they are absolutely entitled to a first place, they certainly deserve to stand in a somewhat higher position than that indicated in the second clause of our somewhat arbitrary classification. They treat of homely topics-love, sorrow, inconstancy, the primrose path-but in their mode and intention they are above mediocrity; especially in the sonnets, there is discoverable a vein of natural pathos, which in itself is one of the highest expressions of the poetic faculty. It is dangerous advice to give a young rhymster, but, upon a more than casual perusal of Mr. Allan's poems, we are inclined to say-go on and improve.

Meditations on the Miracles of Christ. By the Very Rev. J. S. Howson, D.D., Dean of Chester.—The object of this book is to deal with the miracles in a religious, meditative manner. There is less an attempt to explain them, or bring them into harmony with any known physical laws, than to derive a practical lesson from them. Had the title borne the word "Practical" before the word "Meditations," it would have fully explained the subject of the volume.

The Chila's Book of Song and Praise. Including Thirty-four pieces of Music, with Pianoforte Accompaniment, and upwards of Two Hundred and Fifty Illustrations. (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.)— Songs and hymns learned in childhood have, says the Editor of this capital selection, an immeasurable influence upon the whole life of the singer. There is no doubt of it. Who does not remember the "Busy Bee" of Dr. Watts, "Twinkle, Little Star," "The Bird of the Wilderness" of Hong the Busiek Charles of the Wilderness." ness" of Hogg the Ettrick Shepherd, the "Better Land" of Mrs. Hemans, and Moore's "Last Rose of Summer?" These, and a hundred others, familiar and beloved-some with music, and all with appropriate illustrations-delicate cuts of birds and flowers, arabesque borders, charming bits of woodland scenery, and pretty domestic incidents—make up a volume which is unique in its novelty, and valuable as a moral agent. its novelty, and valuable as a moral agent. Much of the music has been composed and arranged expressly for the work, and many of the songs are published by the consent of the copyright holders. These, combined with pieces selected from such writers as Wordsworth, Campbell, Cowper, Scott, Montgomery, Young, Southey, Heber, and Mary Howitt, make up an unexceptionable and appropriate Christmas present for little singers.

Illustrations to Goethe's Faust. Konewka. The English Text from Bayard Taylor's Translation. (Low, Marston, and Searle.)-Who that has taken a trip by steam to Gravesend or Margate, does not remember the artist who cut portraits with a pair of scissors out of black paper, sticks them on a card, and sells them for sixpence each? These silhouettes of characters from "Faust" are of just that kind—improved. Here we have, in black, the figures and faces of Faust, Marguerite, Mephistopheles, Wagner, Martha, and Ferdinand, exhibiting, it must be confessed, an amount of character, fertility of fancy, and a wealth of good, though quaint, drawing, so remarkable that we wonder how such effects can be produced by such apparently simple means. Beneath each subject are the German verses proper to the subject illustrated, while on the page opposite are the English translations, with sometimes a little more of the text, in order to allow the reader to follow the course of the famous story; the whole printed on fine cartridge paper and bound in a handsome cover of maroon and gold and black, forming a handsome and curious Christmas book

From Tent to Padace. By Benjamin Clarke, author of the "First Heroes of the Cross," &c. (Sunday School Union.)—The Story of Joseph, one of the most touching of the Old Testament narratives, is here told in simple language, with such comments and explanations as are necessary to make it plain and easily understood by children. The text is illustrated by some thirty high-class wood-engravings, and the volume, in its handsome binding of green and gold, is one that any girl or boy would only be too happy to possess.

Under Gray Walls. By Sarah Doudney, author of "The Beautiful Island," &c. (Sunday School Union.)—About "Priorsbury Cathedral," which may be any cathedral the reader may recognize, the action of this well-told story is made to revolve. All the characters, from Dr. Cravenhurst, the dean, to Bessie, the sweet heroine, who eventually becomes the wife of Canon Vyvian, are cleverly and naturally drawn; the action of the plot proceeding steadily from the opening chapter to the end; though the plot itself is so simple, that to epitomize it would be to destroy the pleasure the reader will enjoy in its unravelment. Full-page engravings illustrate the story.

Through the Looking-Glass, and What Mix Found There. By Lewis Carroll, author of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," with Fifty Illustrations by John Tenniel.—Fazy making a funny story out of a game of chesquare of a fender and fire-irons, and chairs and tables,—out of so ordinary a piece of furnium as a looking-glass, with only a kitten for companion! And yet out of these materials, aided, it is true, by vivid imagination and a thorough knowledge of the sort of reading and the kind of pictures that children love, Messrs. Carroll and Tenniel have constructed a delightful volume, full of suggestion and brimming over with fun Prefaced with a chess problem, with "Pasm to play and mate in eleven moves," the tale procedit with poetic fancies and curious typographicicombinations—as must prove irresistibly attractive by young people; aye, and to all who, though did in years, are young in spirit.

Birds and their Nests. By Mary Howitt (S.W. Partridge and Co.)—A charming volume, which will certainly be warmly welcomed by the little They will probably look first at its outside, bright in crimson and gold, with the loveliest little bird's-nest containing four blue eggs in the centre. A delightful book for young people, we say again, and defy contradiction. Dictionary of Phrase and Fable. By the Rer. E. Cobham Brewer, LI.D. (Cassell.) - Dr. Brewer's volume is one which may be taken up by a reader at any time, and will afford amusement. It is full of interesting matter. Under an alphabetical arrangement, a vast mass of subjects is introduced, and curious particulars are furnished. The Editor fairly describes his production 25 2 sweep-net of a book, enclosing anything that comes within its reach. Again, there is no distinction made between fiction and truth; so that a reader has no guide whereby he may determine the historical value of the information given. Of "Moll Flanders" we have a mation given. Of "Moll Flanders" we have a biography beginning, "A woman of extraordinary beauty, &c. (Chas. II. reign.) LÜBKE'S HISTORY OF SCULPTURE.*

Dr. Lübke, in these magnificent volumes, has a wide subject, and has treated it broadly. Historical and mythological learning, a knowledge of the critical writings of his predecessors, and an acquaintanceship with the art treasures left us by the most famous sculptors, are necessary qualifications in one who goes over such an extensive field as that forming the area in which the present author has worked. And these Dr. Lübke obviously possesses. He has, moreover, the additional advantage of not being thwarted by prejudices. One school of art does not receive attention or praise at the expense of another. He can see the good that existed in all, an! apportions praise and blame with fairness. His prepossessions are not pronounced. It is, however, as an historian rather than as a critic that Dr. Lübke appears before us. His work is a learned and able statement of the nature and course of development of sculpture in the East, in Greece and Rome, and in Europe during the middle ages, down to the end of the eighteenth century, when the impulse given by antiquity ceased to manifest itself, and sculpture, like the other arts, assumed a form of its own. After a brief introduction, in which he defines the general scope, and aims, and limits of the art, he takes us to those extensive territories of Eastern Asia which, in the early ages, were the seat of highly developed civilization. In India we find primæval systems of religion as fantastically extravagant as the forms of exuberant nature; and, corresponding with them, we see in the whole life of the country "an order and organization opposed to everything presented to our view by the other nations of antiquity." Unchangeable stability is inscribed from the earliest ages on the existence of the great Eastern family of nations. They were not affected by the progress of events. The power of Mahomet did not shake the religion of Brahma; and even the English, with their Christianity, have not been able to force the life of the Hindoos out of its ancient track. monuments of these countries resemble the people. Without exception they are religious. In great and small matters religious ideas gov rn the life of the Hindoo, and so the distorted forms of the prevailing religious ideas find expression in their sculpture. The subjects of mythology which almost exclusively engage Indian sculpture, either as temple ornamentation on the façades of rock temples, or the colossal images of Buddha, originating in the earlier Buddhist period, are fantastically wild. And the same state of things is manifested in the works of art of those countries -China and Japan-which have received their religion and civilization from India. countries "the technical perfection of their productions is as highly developed as their intellectual value is low, and their beauty !imited, and even quaint." Oriental art never soared into the realm of free beauty; but clung either to the imitation of nature, or lapsed into unrestrained and caricatured extravagance.

In Egypt, on the other hand, a practical and acting nation, the gods did not form the central idea; but secular life, the history of the State or ruler, inspired art and formed the subject of re-presentation. In the tombs which surround the pyramid of ancient Memphis, we have monuments which evidence the high perfection to which the sculpture of the Egyptians had attained even so early as the twenty-second century before Christ. In Babylon and Nineveh, again, never secluded like India and Egypt, the people have left us a portraiture of themselves. Yet, as Dr. Lübke points out, in spite of undeniable excellences, lack of feeling, of style, and, combined with this, an incapacity for true artistic composition, limits Assyrian art. Like Egyptian art, it stands in close connection with architecture, "being nothing else than the decoration of given surfaces." It never broke the fetters of Oriental constraint and rose The same may into freedom and independence. be said for Persian art, as well as for that of Syria and Asia Minor. in a single figure—the statue. In Dr. Lübke's Second Book, after a brief but comprehensive review of the origin and nature of Greek plastic art, resulting from the new forms of state and life which accompanied the political institutions of the people, wherein the popular will enjoyed unlimited authority, the author divides his subject into "Periods," the first of which includes the earliest phase of Greek sculpture. ing monuments of this period are, of course, scanty, and we find art strongly biassed by the realistic traditions of the East. But we soon perceive it is finding its own true soil—"the representation of ideal life in myth and legend." Of this the metope relief in the central temple at Selinus, now from which she was to rise to the highest and freest perfection." The second period (c. 470 to c. 400) includes a fresh advance in civilization, and to this time we are indebted for some of the highest remains of Greek plastic art, all of which Dr. Lübke fully describes. "From the freedom of Lübke fully describes. Athens to the death of Alexander the Great (c. 400 to c. 323)" forms the third period, and "from the death of Alexander to the conquest of Greece by the Romans" the fourth period, according to Dr. Lübke's arrangement; and of each there is a full and complete historical and critical review, illustrated by the most famous examples left us. As a specimen of what was produced, Dr. Lübke adorns his pages with numerous woodcuts of the various styles which characterised the several periods and schools. Of these we present a cut various styles which the periods and schools. Of these we present a cut of Aphrodite, after Dædalus, from a statue now in the Vatican. It is given as evidence of how much the art now delighted itself in combining representations of the gods with the spirit of graceful genre-work.

Dr. Libke's third book is devoted to an and its History in Italy previous to the Midde Ages. The subject is divided into sectors, intelligibly treated—the first period being compied with the art product of the ages which terminated with the accession to supreme power of Augustus, during which time the development of historical sculpture was greatly promoted by the Roman custom of creating triumphal mon ments. During the second period—from August to Adrian (A.D. 14 to 138)—it advanced mo decidedly in the path it had taken under August It was increasingly admitted into the service architecture, and was compelled to satisfy the mands of a refined luxury. Grand and thoroug characteristic works were produced. Roman scu ture attains the height of its peculiarity in the decoration of the massive and richly finished monuments erected to the honour of the emperors. The life, deeds, and triumphs of the Cæsars were glorified by the sculptor's art. Among the earliest works of this kind are the two fragments of a triumphal arch of Claudius, now in the Villa Borghese, in Rome, and the better preserved relief, the time of Adrian till the decline of the Empire art was gradually sinking, and of this Dr. Libke gives sufficient and interesting proof in his illustrations of isolated statues, and of the lesser plastic arts—coins, cut stones, and toreutic works,

Of these the most important depicts that part of the procession which is on the point of entering the triumphal arch, with the sacred vessels of the Temple, the Ark of the Covenant, and the seven-branched candlestick. of the art of sculpture. Yet plastic art was not utterly interdicted. In the Christian Museum of the Lateran there exist statues, found in the catacombs, which depict the figure of the historical Christ, but "represent Him under the symbolical designation of the Good Shepherd." The range of ideas exhibited by the artists is not great; but, as Dr. Lübke explains, there was freedom from dogmatic rules and assumption of ecclesiastical precept. And it is to this element of freedom Dr. Lübke attributes the capability in Christian art of development and perfection, while "among the Byz intines art was so repressed by strict ecclesiastical fetters, that it was at length utterly stiffed." Dr. Lübke glances at the most important of the works sti l in preservation, and gives specimens of those in which the characteristics are given in most detail. He then procee ls to the Byzantine Romanesque epoch, in which we see the remarkable process of the development of a new Christian art. In the tenth and eleventh centuries purely ornamental sculpture is, as a rule, feeble. Sculpture, indeed, almost till the twelfth century, remains exclusively a lesser art. "She is a Cinderella," says Dr. Lübke, "and must be glad even to be assigned a place in subordinate works." Ivory carving was first in importance. It, like all the arts of the period, was almost exclusively employed for ecclesiastical purposes Caskets, combs, hunting-h rus, and drinking horns also form subjects for the sculptor's skill; but in all are to be distinguished - "one, the barbarous style, based on the declining remnants of the antique; the other follows Byzantine models." Of the latter style we present our readers with one of the most characteristic works one of the relief tablets in the library of St. Gallen, ascribed to the famous abbot Tutto, who died in 912. In the centre is the youthful Christ enthroned, surrounded by the cherubim with six The four Evangelists are in the comers, and the four symbolic figures (the sun, moon, earth, and ocean) are introduced. in antique syle, personified as deities. Gradually Dr. Lübke takes us through all the phases of art during the middle ages, glances more rapidly at later developments, and leaves us at the threshold of our own day.

The Royal Illuminated Book of Legends, narrated in Ancient Ballad Form; with appropriate music, arranged in an easy style for voice and pianoforte, suited to little folks or great folks and minstrels of all degrees; each story or legend illustrated by a set of brilliant pictures, designed in the quaint spirit of mediaval times, and printed in colours and gold by Marcus Ward, Illuninator to the Queen, and published by W. P. Nimmo, of Edinburgh.—A set of the Fine Art Toy Books noticed in our last—containing Alfred Tennyson's "Sleeping Beauty," "Ye Interestynge Storie of Cinderella and ye Lyttel Glass Slyppere," and other ballads, told anew by Francis Davis, are printed on fine paper and enclosed in a wonderful cover of blue, red, black, and gold, with the royal arms in an arabesque border; thus making a novel and delightful Christmas book.

The Iron Horse; or, Life on the Line. A Tale of the Grand National Trunk Railway. By R. M. Ballantyne. (Nisbet & Co.)-The Grand National Trunk Kailway here described is not the great iron road in Canada, but an imaginary English line, with the working of which the author seems thoroughly well acquainted. Under the guise of a most exciting story, he describes the method of the railway system, and tells all about the hardships the men undergo, the dangers they encounter, and temptations to which they are exposed; with here and there some startling episodes, evidently founded on reliable fact. The book gives us some vivid pictures of the inner life of that useful class by whom the carrying trade of the country is mainly conducted; and now that the questions of overtime, long hours, and insufficient pay are being brought under public notice, many of its incidents will attract attention; for it is not difficult to strip the characters of their thin veil of fiction, and to see them as they are—industrious attendants on the tireless Iron Horse.

Kirstin's Adventures; a Tale for the Young. By the Author of "Casimir, the Little Exile." (Bell & Daldy.)—Reproduced, with certain omissions supplied, from "Aunt Judy's Magazine," this Danish story of love and adventure makes a very pretty Christmas book. The scenery described is of a character quite distinct from that familiar to English readers, while some of the incidents are novel and effective. Kirstin, the fisherman's daughter, is a charming little creature, whose faithfulness and affection under many trying circumstances are rewarded at last, as woman's faith is too seldom rewarded, by the love and trust of a true an I worthy man. Several Norse legends are introduced with good effect.

The Illustrated Pocket Bible. (Bagster & Son). -In biblical appliances, no house can compare with that of Messrs. Bagster. They were the first to supply really good pocket volumes with references long before either of the Universities thought it worth their while to do so. They not only produced good books, but they also introduced an excellent kind of morocco binding with flexible backs, and many of their books which have been in daily use for the past twenty years may be seen without a leaf started or a section come unsewn. Their newest production is a neat pocket bible with a selection of references printed in a central column, illustrated with a large number of outline engravings; but the special feature of the volume is the very elaborate series of questions elucidatory of the sense of the text. These, with the accompanying index of subjects, make the volume a very appropriate and useful present to the young.

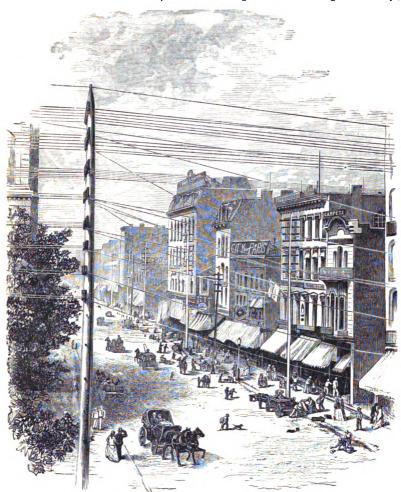

Doll World; or, Play and Earnest. A Study from Real Life. By Mrs. Robert O'Reilly, author of "Daisy's Companions." With eight Illustrations by C. A. Saltmarsh. (Bell and Daldy.)—"What sort of present shall I take to my little goddaughter, just ten years old? A doll? Well. I bought her a doll on her birthday, in September, and now it is Christmas. A Noah's ark? I remember her uncle gave her one on the same interesting occasion. A dress? She has plenty of dresses. A book? Yes, I think a book would be best of all. But it must be a book she can understand. Not too grave and learned either, but one with a story in it. It must have a story; for all children love stories. But how to choose the right one? Ah! here's the Christmas Bookseller is pust come to hand I shall get information about all sorts of books from that. Yes, I thought so. Just the very book I want: the Doll World; or, Play and Earnest. The bookseller is pretty sure to have it."

The Infant's Magazine. (Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday.)—Having arrived at the dignity of a sixth yearly volume, this prettily-illustrated and interesting magazine may now be looked upon as one of the institutions of the country. It contains poems and nursery songs printed in large type, and illustrated with numerous woodcuts of attractive character, among which we recognise Harrison Weir's now well-known nightingale and poodle. We may observe, indeed, that in none of the higher-priced periodicals, or even in the expensive table-books issued at this time of year, do we find engravings of such excellence as these. Some pretty cradie songs and music for the nursery add to the charms of this capital little serial.

"THE LEISURE HOUR" AND "SUNDAY AT HOME,"

Forty years ago the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, under the presidency of Lord Brougham, produced the "Penny Magazine," the publication of which gave a great and lasting impetus to popular education. It enjoyed a large circulation, for it contained a wast quantity of information, illustrated more or less with wood engravings. Moreover the "Leisure Hour" has a speciality that did not come within the scope of the earlier work. It contains continuous tales, and therefore appeals to the sympathies and supplies the literary needs of a far larger number of readers than the conductors of the "Penny Magazine" ever had a chance of addressing.

The Circling Year, a handsome volume, consisting of poems and prose articles descriptive of the phenomena of the seasons in various countries; national customs among different peoples; the flowers, fruits, and other products of the earth; the habits of the peasantry, and other notable facts connected with their indoor and outdoor life—each subject illustrated with woodcuts or chromo-lithographic pictures—the whole forming a very acceptable table-book suitable for the season.

William Tyndale: a Biography. A Contribution to Early History of the English Bible. the Rev. R. Demaus, M.A., Author of "Hugh Latimer: a Biography," &c. — Though Tyndale is acknowledged to be the "true hero of the English Reformation," it is strange that nothing like a regular biography of him has hitherto appeared. Indeed, till the publication, some thirty years ago, of Anderson's "Annals of the English Bible," little was known of him beyond what had been recorded in Foxe's "Book of Martyrs." But, as Mr. Demaus observes, the value of Foxe's narrative is beyond dispute and cannot be overlooked, for he doubtless derived his information from authentic sources—"from men who had been intimately associated with Tyndale in those two periods of his life whose history he has recorded." While freely availing himself of the researches of previous writers, the author has in no case, he tells us, transferred their statements to his own pages till he has carefully investigated and verified them. No assertion has been taken for granted. Everything has been examined afresh. The originals have been consulted and deliberately weighed, it is hoped, without the distorting influence of any theory. The localities associated with the life of Tyndale have been personally visited and explored, and especial care has been devoted throughout to the exact determination, so far as possible, of the precise dates of all the occurrences in the biography. Thus, continues the author, although there still remain in the story of Tyndale's life gaps where all information fails us, and which can only be bridged over by conjecture and probabilities, it is believed that there is here laid down a solid hasis of fact which no subsequent investigation will overthrow, and into which any future discovery will impart the ease and harmony which belong to truth. The volume, which is handsome and portly, is prefaced with a portrait of Tyndale, engraved from that in the possession of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and at the end are added fac-simile pages of the first English New Testament from the original in the library of the Bap-tist College at Bristol. Written with care, and with an evidently earnest endeavour to arrive at the truth of every statement made by previous writers, this biography will worthily take its stand beside that of brave old Latimer.

Old Schoolfellows, and What Became of Them; a series of stories supposed to be related by the clergyman, the doctor, the barrister, the captain, the merchant, the banker, and the artisan, who, having been to school together, take different paths in life, and accidentally meet in London after years of separation. There is nothing particularly novel in the machinery of the book, but the stories themselves are capital, and are illustrated by some clearly cut and graphic wood engravings.

The Seven Golden Candlesticks. By the Rev. H. B. Tristram, LL. D.—Having visited Palestine, and carefully noted the state of the Seven Churches within the range of Mount Imolus, Asia Minor, referred to by St. John in the Apocalypse—Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea—Mr. Tristram bethought him that it would be a good thing to compare their present and past condition, and to acquaint the public with the result of his researches. This he did in the pages of "Sunday at Home," from which magazine the chapters forming this handsome volume have been carefully revised and expanded. The production of these volumes proves that the conductors of this society have determined to produce good sterling literature in place of the goody-goody books which have not unfrequently been thought sufficient for the literary needs of religious readers.

The Literary Bouquet, gathered from various Authors, and illustrated with numerous drawings on wood by eminent artists. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo.)—Wide and far-reaching as is the field of English literature, almost exhaustless in variety and freshness, it is not surprising that such books as this possess for large classes of readers a charm peculiarly their own. The present collection, beginning with Longfellow's well-known dedicatory verses—

If any thought of mine, or sung or told, Has ever given delight or consolation, Ye have repaid me back a thousand fold, By every friendly sign and salutation—contains extracts from the poems of Spenser, Goldsmith, Moore, Byron, Campbell and others, and prose sketches from Dickens, Washington Irving, and some less known writers. The whole illustrated by a series of landscape and figure subjects, admirably engraved, with head and tail pieces of the conventional but ever welcome combination of flowers, fruit, and birds, making together a choice and elegant Christmas book in an attractive binding of emerald and gold.

Crumbs Swept Up. By T. De Witt Talmage, Brooklyn, U.S. (Hodder and Stoughton).— Somewhat in the nature of apologues, or suggestive lay sermons, these "Crumbs" will be accepted by many English readers as good and suitable mental food. For, under such quaint headings as "Cut Behind!" "The Hatchet Buried," "Rip-Rap," and "Swallowing a Fly," Mr. Talmage contrives to tell a good many home truths in a very effective manner. But the book has another element of interest for English readers—an element which the writer could hardly have anticipated; it acquaints them with several Transatlantic customs that have no, or but slight, parallels at home. For instance, the reception of the new pastor by a village congregation is described in all its strangeness, and with something more of circumstantial detail than is to be found in the books of Fanny Fern, T. S. Arthur, or Mrs. Beecher Stowe, frequently as those writers refer to ministers and their ways.

ART RAMBLES IN ARTISTIC COUNTRIES.*

No fewer than one hundred and thirty-three woodcuts illustrate the work; and these (as will be seen from that which we transfer to our pages) are executed in the best style of art. The work is not a complete whole, but consists of a number of papers contributed at various times to the Art Journal. The work consists of biographical facts, literary anecdotes, descriptions of famous works, and graphic illustrations, which combine to make it one of the most entertaining and one of the most instructive books in art literature that have appeared. Our illustration, we must add, is the Town Hall at the Hague, the most aristocratic and pleasant of all Dutch towns.

The Poetical Works of Sir W. Alexander, Earl of Stirling, &c. Now first Collected and Edited. With Memoir and Notes. In Three Vols. Vol. I. (Glasgow: Ogle and Co.)—The modest editor of the Earl of Stirling's works does not give his name, but it is clear his labour has been one of Drummond of Hawthornden and Sir William Alexander were contemporaries, and both were popular in their day; but, whilst the former is now considered a classic, Sir William has been almost totally neglected. This edition will, we hope, have the effect of again drawing attention to his merits as a poet. At present we have only This contains two the first volume before us. rare poems, "Aurora" and the "Elegie on Prince Henrie," besides the "Short View of the State of Man;" an admirable sonnet, "Jonathan;" an heroic poem, in one hundred and five stanzas, "Crœsus," which the author designated a "monarchecke tragedie;" and other minor pieces. Lovers of our elder muse will thank the editor for introducing them to Sir W. Alexander.

The Child's Bible Narrative: Being a Consecutive Arrangement of the Narrative and other portions of Holy Scripture, in the Words of the Authorized Version. Illustrated. (Cassell, Petter, and Uai-pin.)—To many young readers the division of the text into chapter and verse is to some extent a hindrance to their full comprehension of Scrip-ture story. The publishers, recognising this fact, principal texts related in the Bible, from the Creation to St. Paul's journey to Rome, in a continuous narrative, illustrated—like their Family Bible-with fine engravings, many of which are drawn by Doré and other eminent artists. Testament history is told in the words of the Bible itself, with merely the omission of genealogies and other matters purely historical and hard to understand; while the four Gospels are harmonized into one connected account; and the Apocalypse, from its highly figurative character, and the difficulty of properly presenting it to the minds of the young, has been altogether omitted. Various attempts have from time to time been made to familiarize children with the events of Scripture by giving isolated fragments, particular narratives, and slight epitomes; but no Bible Story Book so completely and satisfactorily meets their requirements as does this handsome and well-printed volume.

Among the volumes recently issued by this Edinburgh house, the four which have reached us are prettily illustrated :

Scripture Stories in Verse: with Sacred Songs and Miscellaneous Pieces. By John Edmond, D.D., of Highbury; reprinted from the "United Presbyterian Juvenile Magazine," and other periodicals, in which they appeared some twenty years ago, with some new poems added.—Though the use of thems may be useful in fixing the facts of use of rhyme may be useful in fixing the facts of Scripture history in the minds of children, we cannot say very much in favour of Dr. Edmond's poetic faculty.

The Wanderings of Master Peter in Search of Knowledge is a good readable account of the romantic adventures of Peter the Great in Holland and England, translated from the German by Miss Campbell Overend.

The Besieged City, and the Heroes of Sweden.-This also is a translation from the same source, by the same lady. The Thirty Years' War, in the course of which the city of Madgeburg was besieged and destroyed, furnishes the first of these well told stories; the histories of Gustavus Vasa and Gustavus Adolphus the subject-matter for and Gustavus Adolphus the subject-matter for the other two tales; all three being likely to excite the admiration of boy readers advantage by mistresses.

MESSRS. JOHNSTONE, HUNTER, & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

THE books recently issued by this firm may be generally characterized as specially fitted for well-regulated family reading. The most important among them is a new edition of that famous work—

Truth in Scotland, since the year 1680:" reprinted from the Original Editions, with Explanatory and Historical Notes by the Rev. John H. Thomson. The facsimile title of the first edition, 1714, roughly printed in red and black, also contains a note of the "Appendix containing the Queen's Ferry Paper, Torwood Excommunication; a Relation concerning Mr. R. Cameron, Mr. D. Cargill, and H. Hall; and an account of those who were killed without Process of Law, and Banished to Foreign Lands; with a Short View of the Oppressive Exactions." In addition to views of the Tolbooth, or City Prison of Edinburgh, so familiar to the readers of Scott's "Heart of Midlothian;" the Old Parliament House and Grassmarket, Edinburgh; the High Church of Glasgow, and many other places rendered famous in connection with the Scottish martyrs, we have the frontispiece reproduced, representing in a double page some of the witnesses for Truth "tortured by boots, thumbkins, and firematches," &c. - a most curious facsimile of the original rude old wood The present edition contains all the original memoirs, speeches, and testimonies, with such notes added as are necessary to a full understanding of the circumstances under which hundreds of men and women suffered for conscience' sake—a work as popular in Scotland as "Foxe's Book of Martyrs" is in England. The next volume is-

The Children's Home Annual: A neat and interesting volume, full of tales, essays, and poems for young readers, prettily illustrated and enclosed in a bright, attractive-looking cover,—a book quite suitable for a Christmas present. "The English j," they hold, "is a sound quite alien from Latin; and it has therefore been determined to pronounce it in the ancient manner, like our y." Of the other consonants, g also suffers modifica-We have no doubt there is evidence to show that g in ancient Latin was always hard, and there would be some advantage in adopting the pronunciation, inasmuch as it would "enable a pupil to dispense with the perplexing changes in the conjugation" of such a verb as rea, for instance, and bring into prominence the relation ship between Latin and Greek, as in genus yeves, fugere φεύγειν. But the "perplexing changes are really imaginary on the part of the innovators. We have no space to give the list, but as a rule (we believe invariably) the Continental practice is followed.

Now, from reasons we have already hinted, we see no just cause for the proposed innovation. Our pronunciation of the Latin and Greek languages is the pronunciation that most suits the English ear and tongue. It is not the result of predelermined design on the part of any, or of an attempt to follow the ancients, but is the natural outcome of the English mind. We think-we at least hope—that the general consent of English scholars will not be given to the proposed "approximation to the ancient Roman pronunciation.

"One does not often see so skilful a specimen of lucid condensation as this work exhibits. The book will be found most useful, both from its completeness and clearness, and from the tone in which it is written."— Guardian.

The Edition consists of 750 copies, of which not more than three hundred remain for sale.

ETCHINGS AND ENGRAVINGS OF THE OLD MASTERS.

Selected from the most famous Collections, and published in facsimile under the superintendence of EDOUARD LIEVRE, with brief Descriptions by G. DUPLESSIS, 20 Plates, mounted on cartridge paper, impl. folio size, £3 10s. (But few copies printed).

This Collection contains reproductions of the best works of REMBRANDT, RAIMONDE, RUISDAEL, DÜRER, VAN DYCK, CLAUDE LORRAINE, SCHONGAUER, BERGHEM, DIRK VAN STAR, and JACQUES DE BARBARI. VAN DICK, CLAUDE LORRAINE, SCHONGAUER, BERGHEM, DIRK VAN STAR, and JACQUES DE BARBARI. The whole are engraved in exact facsimile of the originals, even the paper being imitated to a nicety, and the Publishers believe they are justified in stating that the MOST CRITICAL CONNOISSEUR WOULD FAIL TO DETECT THAT THEY ARE REPRODUCTIONS. It is a Collection that only requires to be seen to be appreciated, and no admirer of the Art of Etching would knowingly be without it.

PRINTED FOR SUBSCRIBERS ONLY. -In one elegant folio volume, price £3 13s. 6d.

NEW JERUSALEM AND ITS HEAVENLY DOCTRINES. By EMANUEL SWEDENBORG.

A Compendious Introduction to the Author's exhaustive Commentary on the Books of Genesis and Exodus.—The Primary Principles and Leading Truths of the Christian Faith are set forth with the utmost brevity and clearness.—The Chapters on the Divinity of our Lord, the Holy Scriptures, Faith, Liberty, Piety, the Church, the Sacraments, and on Ecclesiastical and Civil Government, are models of profound theological thought and simple and condensed expression, worthy of attentive study in presence of current religious controversies.

HEAVEN AND HELL. By EMANUEL SWEDENBORG. Preface by the Rector of Winwick, Northamptonshire (circ. 1770.)

This work is divided into Three Parts, treating respectively-

I. OF HEAVEN. 2. Of the Intermediate State.

It contains much which cannot but appear strange and novel to the reader unacquainted with the other writings of this singularly gifted man. Its varied and wonderful contents, if carefully studied, are such as to lead the serious and reflecting Christian to conclude that, be his peculiar views in other respects what they may, the Author here supplies a most powerful antidote against the gross materialism and practical infidelity of the last and present century.

THE SUPERNATURAL—ITS SOURCES AND OPERATIONS.

Demy 8vo, price, with Index, 3s.

THEDIVINE PROVIDENCE. By Emanuel

SWEDENBORG.

A Brief Treatise of Divine Polity and Spiritual Ethics. The aim of this book is to "Assert eternal Providence,

And justify the ways of God to man."

It presents a clear and thoroughly reasoned account of the sources and causes of the Divine spiritual-moral law; breathes throughout a spirit of true piety and profound reverence; abounds in views and illustrations of religious truths, marked by singular depth and beauty. A few opinions and state-ments occur which may on a first perusal excite surprise in readers unaccustomed to forms of thought so abstruse; but, after due reflection, they will all be found in harmony with the Author's sublime Christian thesis.

With Index, Two Vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 8s.

THEREVEALED. APOCALYPSE BvEMANUEL SWEDENBORG.

The Divinely inspired Book of the Revelation of St. John is here explained on an entirely new but easily understood principle. In its mysterious and marvellous language, throughout, is described—not the state of earthly Kingdoms and Empires, as generally supposed by Commentators—but the spiritual state of the Christian World, or the Church at large. The expositions are national, doctrinal, and spiritual—not mystical. They specially relate to the Church—i.e., the Kingdom of God on earth and in heaven.

The first seven Chapters are introductory to the three chief subjects of which the book treats—Protestantism, the Papacy, and the Church of the Future. Chapters VIII. to XVI.—The Errors and Evils of the Reformed Churches, symbolized by the Dragon. Chapters XVII. and XVIII.—The Errors and Evils of the Papal System under the figure of Babylon. Chapters XIX. to XXII.—Preparation or the Church of the Protect of or the Church of the Future; its Description and Commencement as a Church of Charity, Liberty, Unity, and Peace.

The explanations of Chapters XVII. and XVIII. deserve special attention, as revealing the inner tate of the Papal Religion, or Babylon, and presenting a vivid picture of its enormities.

of the Book

By RICHARD HENRY and other Poems. STODDARD. One Vol., 16mo. $1.50.

wire. Stoddard's vocation to poetry is clearly stamped on his productions. Combining great spontaneity of feeling with careful and elaborate composition, he not only shows a native instinct of verse, but a lofty ideal of poetry. His fancy is rid in images of gorgeous and delicate beauty; a deep vain of reflection underlies his buldest excursions; vain of reflection underlies his boldest excursions; and on themes of tender and pathetic interest his words murmur a plaintive melody that reaches the hidden sources of tears."—Harper's Magazine.

"For the first time, as far as we know, a really intelligible account of the Commune is here given to the public. You are made to understand clearly and completely alike the motives of the men who ruled and ruled Paris, and of the men who might have stopped them and did not."—Scotsman.

"Art, statistics, incidents, decrees, anecdotes, biographical notices, descriptions, and pathetic stories crowd the pages of this charming volume, which the publishers have done their very best with as regards printing, engraving, and binding. Than it we are hardly likely to have a more complete history."—Slandard

"Reading this volume, and aided by the numerous illustrations which give a peculiar salt to the text, we see in imagination some of the horrid deeds which will for ever sully this period of France's history.

A more complete account of the career of the principal Communists has not appeared."—Morning Post.

"A book of this sort it is almost impossible to criticise generally; we might almost as well attempt to give a precis of a portrait gallery. Our simple duty, and we can most conscientiously perform it, is to advise our readers to buy the book. We know no volume of the size that gives more simply, and yet more pleasurity, an account of that portion of French history which is worth knowing. It is due to the publishers to santly, an account of the palaces enhance the value of the work."—Edinburgh Courant.

the Rev. W. HOLT BEEVER, M.A., Oxon.

"Among the publications that best assist a learner, and help on those who are used to country life, by reducing their general knowledge to rule and practice, we have found the 'Successful Farming,' and 'Notes on Fields and Cattle,' two of the most useful, with the extra recommendation that the books are excellent.

The writer goes deeply into all the mysteries of breeding and rearing stock, and accompanies the most paintstaking and explicit details with diagrams of the points, and a complete treatise on 'judging.' "—Times. 'judging.' "-Times.

"But we must now take leave of Mr. Beever's pleasant pages, in which, however, is contained a rad amount of handy information on these and other agricultural matters, which we have not attempted to call for our readers. We can assure them that, if they take up his volumes, they will invariably find the light they need on aught that appertains to the subject, imparted in the most engaging manner, and not a little assisted by his never failing fund of humour and enthusiasm."—Saturday Review.

Mr. Tenniel's Cartoons from Punch. With

"All the world is familiar with the pathos and sublimity of many of these cartoons, with the exquisite figure and portrait drawing of all, with their political insight so rarely falsified by events. Taken together, they are a pictorial history of the times they embrace, an acquisition to any Library, an ornament and a resource in any Drawing-Room."

"The volume will be hailed with delight at many a fireside, and it will be appealed to in after ages as illustrating the history of the times in which we live."—Daily News.

- The DAILY NEWS says of it, "Bold in design, glorious in colour, and full of a wild, supernatural greater in its characteristics, and partly pre-Raphaelitish, these illustrations will delight the children, added of attention by the old."
- The ATHENEUM says, "These reproductions seem all to be by Messrs. Leighton Brother, and and extremely good. Of the higher qualities of these illustrations, which are due to Mrs. Boyle, it was not not much."
- The PAIL-MALL GAZETTE says, "The place of honour must, we think, be given to the 'fair lak' C. Andersen, illustrated by twelve large designs by E. V. B. If we say that E. V. B. has not justice, it is only because the tales would bear at least twice the number of illustrations. But in this gorgeous little volume the artist has excelled herself. . . . It is no dispraise of a very beautiful the artist had doubled our pleasure by doubling her labour."
- The MORNING POST says, "Charles Dickens invoked a blessing on the Christmas bells; we say a best C. Andersen! The Danish fairy-story writer has earned our benison very often, and we therefore more re-issue of some of his famous tales, illustrated by a dozen large designs in colour. The particular trouble or expense to produce a splendid table book; and any reader designs in the little ones, may secure that enviable position, a corner in their hearts, by presenting them with the little ones, may secure that enviable position, a corner in their hearts, by presenting them with the little ones, may secure that enviable position, a corner in their hearts, by presenting them with the little ones."
- The NORTH BRITISH MAIL says, "But the great beauty of the book lies in its illustrations, traited.

 They are large-sized designs in colour, from drawings by E. V. B., and the general effect of their bigit can be exceedingly attractive, to young eyes especially. This is the sort of book that will be numed are page after page, long after the tales and the pictures have become familiar objects."
- The BATURDAY REVIEW says, "To those persons who have five and twenty shillings to spend in seen children, we can confidently recommend Fairy Tales," by Hans Christian Andersen, illustrated by EVV.

Author of Illustrations to Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Falstaff and his Companions," &c. The English Text from Bayard Taylor's Translation. Royal &vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. The Illustrations are very finely finished Silhouettes. [This day.

The illustrations, as the artist's name is almost sufficient to indicate, are all admirably executed silionettes. To those dmire these black outline compositions, there is much in these specimens to give pleasure. They show much subtle ad fanciful expression in a mode of illustration in which the artist is forced to work within very narrow limits,"— a British Mail.

M. Paul Konewka's silhouette designs to Goethe's 'Faust' are accompanied by Mr. Bayard Taylor's new translation : German text, and a very handsome table book is the result. It is not often one comes across a book illustrated with a sette designs, and therefore this volume is all the more welcome. The German is printed under the pictures, and the sish text has a page to itself—a capital arrangement, and one which will gratify all students of German."—Morning Post.

ngston (W. H. G.), Ben Burton; or, Born and Bred at Sea. With Illustrations by Sydney Hall. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

The Saturday Review says: "Mr. Kingston, who always holds one of the highest places amongst the boys of this ration, has written two new tales to help them through these long winter evenings. 'Ben Burton' is, as almost its e implies, a story of sca life. . . . A most ample entertainment is provided."

The Morning Post says: "Ben Burton,' the history of a boy who was 'born and bred at sea,' is another of Mr. gston's manly stories, in which the hero and some of his companions are captured by savages. Pirates also play a conuous part in the tale, and when we have said that Ben is shipwrecked, in addition to his other mishaps, and that he is a K.C.B., with his flag in prospect, that will be sufficient."

The Morning Post says: "A sharp London boy can, it is often said, make his way anywhere: but it is doubtful nether the smartest Arab of this metropolis would not succumb under the difficulties which beset Jack Hazard in his enavours to gain a livelihood. Jack was a boat-driver on the Eric Canal, into which he was thrown now and then by his asters. He roved about with only a dog as a companion, until he met with some friendly charcoal burners, who assisted in. The author, who tells his story in a very lively manner, hints at continuing Jack's adventures, in which case we we no doubt his book in embryo will be as entertaining as the present volume unquestionably is."

THE UNEXPECTED KING.

And behold, Joash king of Judah stood at his pillar, and the princes and the trumpets by the king: and all the people of the land rejoiced, and sounded with trumpets. - 2 CHRONICLES, XXIII. 11-13.

In the present day, it seems to be particularly desirable to place within reach of the Young every suitable help to the understanding of the Scriptures—such help as shall enable them to discover and secure for them selves the treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge which lie hidden, more or less deeply, beneath the surface of the Written Word.

It is admitted, on all hands, that Pictorial Illustrations are among the most valuable means of attracting the Young; and, accordingly, Forty-eight beautiful Drawings have been provided, which will be found to include the Principal Events of the Sacred History.

But, second to none, as a means of fixing the attention of Young Persons upon the truths of Scripture is a copious use of judicious Questioning with the Bible in hand; and, to enable Teachers as well as Pupils in avail the manual the state of the sta avail themselves of this important method of instruction, a Series of carefully considered Questions has been available of the superior of the supplied. These will be found suitable either for vival voce use by the Teacher, or they may be made the object of study by the Pupil.

A set of Co'oured Maps, and an elaborate Index to the Scriptures, complete the work.

This Edition of the Bible is a remarkably Portable Little Volume, and is issued in attractive Moroc.0 Binding, price 12s.

THE STAR OF CHILDHOOD:

A First Book of Prayers and Instruction for Children.

Compiled by a Priest. Edited by the Rev. T. T. CARTER, M.A.

"All the Instructions, all of the Hymns, and most of the Prayers here are excellent. And when we use the cautionary expression 'most of the,' &c., we do not mean to imply that all the prayers are not excellent in themselves, but only to express a doubt whether in some cases they may not be a little too elaborate for children. Of course it by no means follows that when you use a book you are to use equally every portion of it: what does not suit one may suit a score of others, and this book is clearly compiled on the comprehensive principle. But to give a veracious verdict on the book it is needful to mention this. We need hardly say that it is well worth buying, and of a very high order of merit."—

"The Rev. T. T. Carter, of Clewer, has put forth a much needed and excellent book of devotions for little children, called 'The Star of Childhood.' We think it fair to tell our readers, that in it they will find that for children who have lost a near leative a short commemorative prayer is provided; but we most earnestly hope that even by those who are not willing to accept this usage, the book will not be rejected, for it is a most valuable one."—Monthly Packet.

"One amongst the books before us deserves especial notice, entitled 'The Star of Childhood,' and edited by the Rev. T. T. Carter: it is eminently adapted for a New Year's Gift. It is a manual of prayer for children, with hymns, litanies, and instructions. Some of the hymns are illustrative of our Lord's Life; and to these are added reduced copies from engravings of Fra Angelico."—Penny Post.

"Supposing a child to be capable of using a devotional manual, the book before us is, in its general structure, as good an attempt to meet the want as could have been put forth. In the first place it succeeds, where so many like efforts fail, in the matter of simplicity. The language is quite within the compass of a young child; that is to say, it is such as a young child can be made to understand: for we do not suppose that the book is intended to be put directly into his hands, but through the hands of an instructor,"—Church Bells.

TESTIMONIAL

Guttenburg Printing Works, Allert Street, Ellor Street, Penalicton, near Manchester.

Mr. Salmon, 13, Parsonage, Manchester.
Dear Sir, "The "Liberty" Power Printing Press delivered by you has been got to work. It has all the excellencies of the hand-press for fine and coloured work, but with the additional advantages of speed, more correct impression, and regularity of colour; in fact, there is not any class of fine work that comes into a jobbing office which may not be done by it. I know of no other machine of the class equal to it, although I have had a large experience of other makes. There is one matter for the guidance of printers which is important,—the necessity of cone pulleys for the regulation of speed for the various qualities of work.—I remain, yours truly, Stamp Album published containing Compartments for Future Issues.

Will be ready on the 15th of February next, a SECOND EDITION, enlarged and greatly improved, of

ALBUM STAMP PERMANENT

By H. STAFFORD SMITH. Brought up to the Present Time, spaces being provided for the Deccan, Japan, Guatemala, Fiji Islands, Tolima, Fernando Po, the German Empire, &c., &c.

Illustrated by a Specially Engraved Map of the World.

"The leading feature of this Album is the provision of supplemental leaves, bound up with the book, thereby saving future trouble and expense. All leaves not required at the date of the publication of the Album will be found with an asterisk (*) at the bottom of the page. More than 30 of such leaves are provided (allowing for no less than 1,700 additional stamps), which are so distributed throughout the volume, that there is little chance of any new stamp country being placed out of its proper order."—Extract from the Prefere order."-Extract from the Preface.

NOTICES OF THE FIRST EDITION.

The American Journal of Philately says:—
"With great pleasure we introduce to our readers this new album, arranged upon the permanent system, that is to say, it has supplementary leaves distributed through the book to meet future demands. On the first page we notice a very good map of the world—good, because it only contains those places issuing stamps, and notes them all, such as Sarawak, Orange Free State, &c., and is not filled with a lot of useless names, i.t., to the starter of the starter o the stamp collector.

Mason's Stamp-Collector's Magazine says:—

"This album is the best adapted for stamp gathering and arranging of any we have yet examined. It "This album is the best adapted for stamp gathering and has ample space for all the stamps yet issued, contains supplementary leaves, bound up with the book, and has ample space for all the stamps yet issued and for all that may be issued for many years to come. It is oblong in form, printed on thick paper, and handsomely bound. We should say that this album will well sustain its title of The Permanent Stamp Album, and does infinite credit to its originator and author."

Ine Stamp-Collector's Magazine says:—

"In looking through this album, we have experienced that pleasure which a well executed work never fails to give. The plan upon which it is conceived is skilfully and carefully followed out, and the accessories of type, and binding are all that could be desired. We have no hesitation in saying that this album will take the first rank among home or foreign compilations, for no book combines in a higher degree the qualities indispensable to excellence and it is decidedly the first we should recommend to any collector in want of an indispensable to excellence, and it is decidedly the first we should recommend to any collector in want of an album." album.

The American Stamp Mercury says :-

The question of a permanent stamp album has at last received a practical solution at the hands of Mr.

Stafford Smith, a copy of whose latest work is before up. It has been appropriate to commend In equestion of a permanent stamp album has at last received a practical solution at the hands of all Stafford Smith, a copy of whose latest work is before us. It has less to condemn and more to commend it than any stamp album we have yet seen. Its general merits are not surpassed by either of the elaborate works of Moens or Lallier. We commend the book with a right good will to the timbrophilic fraternity.

CHLORALUM REVIEW

A Sanitary Journal.

ANITARY questions, the principle and practice of Disinfection, the prevalence and prevention of Contagious Diseases in Man and Animals—one and all admit of popular exposition, and require to be more generally discussed than they yet have been.

"The Chloralum Review" is intended both for Medical and General Readers; and whilst dealing specially with the use of Antiseptics in everyday life and the treatment of disease, it is proposed to publish in its columns contributions from all sources, bearing on the History and Progress of Epidemic and Epizootic Diseases. Since it is desirable to utter words of advice and record facts for the benefit of those who have no desire to read long medical essays, "The Chloralum Review" will aim at conciseness and direct practical utility.

The price of the "Review" is fixed at 1d., and a large proportion of each issue will be circulated free to all Hospitals, Asylums, and Members of the Medical and Pharmaceutical Professions.

Forwarded post free from the Office for an Annual Subscription of 1s. Monthly 1d.

THE HELIOTYPE PROCESS.

Patented 8th Dec., 1869; 5th Sept., 1870; and 20th Oct., 1871.

THE Pictures produced by this process are, in effect, Photographs printed in Printers' Ink at an ordinary Printing-press. They are produced with great rapidity, and independently of light; they are as permanent as engravings; they require no mounting, but come from the press with clean margins, finished and ready for binding or framing.

The HELIOTYPE COMPANY, Limited, having acquired the Patents above enumerated together with the Works, Stock, and Business lately carried on by Messrs. EDWARDS and KIDD, are now prepared to undertake work for Publishers and others desiring to avail themselves of this valuable invention, on exceedingly Moderate Terms.

The process is already in use for Book and Magazine Illustrations, and for these purposes its value to Publishers will at once be recognized. Whether the Illustrations be reproductions of Drawings or other works of Art; or Portraits from life; Scenery, photographed from nature; or whether they be of a Scientific or Technical character, the Heliotype Process is equally applicable; and it is especially suitable for Illustrative Works on Surgery, Botany, Natural History, Architecture, Engineering, &c. The Monthly Magazine, "Art, Pictorial and Industrial" (published by Messrs. SAMPSON LOW and Co.) has been Illustrated exclusively with Heliotypes, almost from the commencement.

The process is invaluable to Architects, Engineers, Surveyors, and others, for producing Copies of Maps, Plans, Designs, and Drawings for Patents, which may either be on the exact scale of the original, or Enlarged or Reduced. For Trade Circulars and Illustrated Catalogues and Notices, this process can be used with great advantage and economy.

The importance of this invention has already been recognized by the Royal Society, the Science and Art Department, the Society of Arts, the Arundel Society, the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, the Royal College of Physicians, and by many authorities eminent in Science and Art. It was exhibited in work at the International Exhibition of 1871.
